A Digital Book for Students

Lecture One

The Drama of Profile

Hello, welcome to all of you. As some of you know it's been quite an opening week here and I've been introducing a lot of very new information, very powerful information. Today is going to be no exception. It's something that I have been looking forward to investigating for a very long time. This course basically gives me that opportunity to be able to look at profile in a way that nobody has ever looked at it before. It really is about understanding the drama; the drama of a life, the drama of a mind that makes up the story of our purpose and the story of our purpose that is found in the profile.

But of course, all of you have been at one level or another trained in profile in terms of the 12 line profiles. And line profiles for me are sort of generics. They're generalizations; they're ways of organizing an overview of a specific chemistry. But they are not, in that sense, precise. That is, there are an extraordinary number of possibilities in terms of profile. When you think about the fact that there are over 60,000 bases that are there in the wheel, then it's clear there are all kinds of combinations, all kinds of complexities.

A number of years ago in one of the earlier Ibiza events I taught a course in trying to give the drama of the motivation that lies underneath and to give that drama, the color drama, a personality so that it could be seen in relationship to line. The dilemma with doing it in that way was that again I was only dealing with generics. You're really in for an interesting process, and also a great deal of material that you're going to be able to download about an hour or so after this class, so that you have access to material you need in order to begin to investigate this yourself.

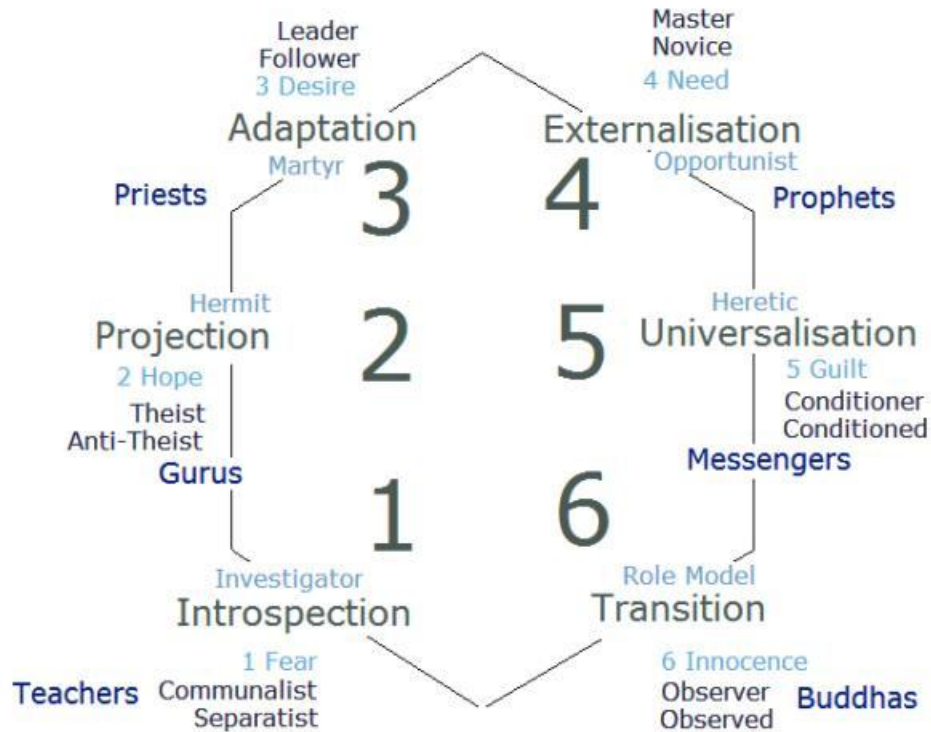

The Keynotes

So, without further ado let's get into the drama. This is a generalized configuration so that you have a whole series or whole sequence of keynotes that are connected to each other. Basically, what you're looking at are simply resonant values. In other words, the relationship between the keynotes, for example, the 1st line where of course here you see the introspection of the investigator and the themes that you see underneath that are brought about through color. That is, through the 1st color and the 1st color motivation of fear and its related terminologies.

RAVE COSMOLOGY VI: Profile, Purpose and Function

A Digital Book for Students

This is the way that it was taught originally. In other words, this is the way that I introduced the relationship thematically. And again, this was simply to be able to understand the value of a 1st color as a motivational theme. Most people get stuck with the concept of fear or the trajectories of communalist or separatist without really understanding that this is a motivation that ultimately leads to teaching and ultimately leads to the need to teach, and be taught as part of that process.

So, this is the way the information was introduced. I'll come back to this, but the whole core of what we're going to be looking at is something that is now available and something where we have depth, and what I'm referring to are chains. When I'm speaking about a chain, what I'm talking about is the structural movement of information, of programming and the realization of programming; so, the movement from base to tone and from tone to color and from color to line and from line to gate and so forth and so on. There we are looking at specific chains.

Now, the thing to understand is that there are so many chains—in PHS and Rave Psychology year two, first and second semesters, twenty-two weeks each just going through the basic line/color/tone chains. That was not including the base chains because it would have taken me a couple of years to actually do the full chain, in that sense.

One of the things about the science of differentiation is that it's just that. That is what Human Design is. It is about differentiation. And differentiation is about understanding that generics and generalizations can be of value analytically to any kind of surface analysis. But the fact is that we are all very, very specific in the way in which we are intended to operate in the way in which we are intended to ultimately display our uniqueness.

The Real Profiles

So, here is the basic configuration. I'll come back to that in a little while. But I want to take you to this, because I want to take you to the meat of this. Over the next six weeks we're going to be going through quite a journey. We are going to look at, as an overview, at all of the real profiles. I mean, the real profiles; not the surface profile. You think about a surface profile. If you look here, for example, at the 4/1 and you can see the way the chart is aligned. You've got the personality on this side in black, and in red, of course, is the design. So, you're looking at a 4th line personality, you're looking at a 1st line design, it gives a 4/1.

But the difference, of course, is that this is the theme that we're used to—the opportunistic investigator, the typical 4/1 generic theme. Now, the interesting thing, and again I will get back to this in a moment and we'll look a lot at this, is of course the anomaly of what it is to have a transitional profile. The transitional profiles are the 1/4, 2/5, 3/6, 4/1, 5/2 and the 6/3, these are transitional profiles.

If you want to see the way they stack up in your JAM Player just go to the free access area and check out the global survey and look at the way in which profile operates in the population and you'll see very clearly that transitional profiles have much less density of population, and they are bridging elements between what are the formal profiles that are always on either side of them.

Of course, one of the anomalies that we come to is that when we're looking at the true profile, and the true profile is a line/color profile, that's the true profile. It is the motivation that determines the uniqueness of the way in which the line is going to operate. And we have six different potential kinds of motivation.

The other thing to be clear about is that when I say this is the true profile there are deeper levels that one can go. The opportunistic Buddha investigative teacher is going to have a potential of six different kinds of cognitive possibilities both in terms of the way in which the mind assimilates information and the way in which the body is designed to focus on sensory experience. It gets very, very nuanced. But then again, if we're really going to understand what kind of purpose there is for a being, then we need to see the full drama of what their profile is. And that drama is what color brings. It brings the motivation. And more than that, it brings the nuance.

Transitional Profiles

Now, obviously what you see in the 4/1 is that the 4/1 is always the same. In other words, that when we're going to be looking at transitional profiles we're going to discover something very odd about them. They are deeply, deeply limited in terms of their motivation. Deeply limited; think about it. When you look at the 5/1 you see that the 5/1 has every single kind of possible motivation and every single kind of determination on the design side. But when you look at the transitional profile you see that it is always the same—6th color, 1st color. It's always this way.

In other words, they're very unique and they're very different from the main profiles. They do not experience any of the other colors. Think about that. There is no 4/1 that's born with the 5th color. It's quite something to imagine. It's one of the things that really tripped up Jovian's programmer. He started to look at the chain configurations for our PHS and Rave Psychology programming and he realized that incarnation is a very specific thing. It's really a very specific thing. You have to come in at a very, very specific time to pick that up.

The Excel File

Then you look at the 5/1. Now, the thing to understand because you're going to get the Excel file, and hopefully all of you can run Excel. The Excel file is a chain file and it is a color/line chain file for both personality and design that takes you through every single one of the profiles. What you'll discover is that there is an incredible number of variations. When you actually get the file you'll see that the 5/1 goes on for about two pages because that's because of all of the variations underneath. That is, the tonal levels and then going down to the base levels because these are taken from full chain maps.

In this illustration I've condensed it down to the variations so that you can see the pattern. And the pattern is so fascinating to look at because it is a pattern that mirrors the line profiling. Look at it this way. Let's look at the 5 together because it's very interesting just to go through the mathematics and see it. You start off at the very beginning, when you're calculating from the beginning of what a 5/1 can be in terms of the various arcs of the personality and the design. You start off and you get a variation that is color 1 with color 1. But then it goes color 1 to color 2. And then the next goes 2 to 2, and then the next 2 to 3.

So, if you look at that, what you're looking at is this spiraling. And it's the same kind of spiraling you have in profiling itself as you move through from the 1/3 to the 1/4 to the 2/4, you have this shifting that's taking place both at the front and at the back, in that sense. You get the same thing happening at the color level. Remember, it is this 88 degree wonder that makes all of this possible.

The 88 Degree Calculation

I can remember when I first began to introduce the knowledge. I had a number of people who had been pretty much open to all kinds of things, and most of them knew astrology. This 88 degree retrograde calculation was something that—they would say things to me like, well, why isn't it 90 degrees. And I'd say everything would be dead because nothing would change. It's the thing that is so incredible about looking at the 88 degree phenomena, just as something to ponder in and of itself, that it is this perfect separation, this 88 degree separation that creates this incredible life mechanism, this movement of information.

Signposts

The thing to grasp about the design is that you're always seeing the life. It's one of the jokes of the BodyGraph. It's the great joke for me of the BodyGraph. You see all those red things. And all those red things are really your life. This is what makes your life. And then you look at all that black stuff and it's who you think you are and it's not connected to what makes your life. This is always the dilemma. I want you to grasp that when you're looking at line/color profile that you have to look at it as a juxtaposed thing. Because that's what it is.

you'll notice is this is simply a movement through the arc of the sun being in the 5 and how long the design sun will be in the 1. It's just a movement of arc. And there is a distance between all of these. After all, this is just line/color. There is the arc that is there for the tones and bases and this is this movement.

And if we begin here, the first thing to look at is you look at the design. Because when you're looking at the design you are looking at what the life of that profile is about. This is the investigative teacher. Now, let's think about what that means for a moment. This is the design side. You have no conscious access to it, which means there is no way your mind can either interfere with it or truly grasp it. It has nothing to do with your mind.

And in terms of the not-self, the not-self does everything in its power to ignore it, even if that unconscious is the sole thing driving its definitions, because it has no access to it, none. When somebody enters into the experiment of Human Design, that experiment is cutting off the mind from trying to run the life and allowing the mind to become mind, to be involved in what it's here for, which we'll get to in a moment. But the moment you're operating according to Strategy and Authority you're automatically aligning your vehicle to its cognition and you're automatically aligning your vehicle to a geometry, a trajectory, a direction, whatever language you want to use, that is absolutely correct for you.

So, take the example of somebody who is a 5/1/1/1, this doubling combination. That person who is a 5/1/1/1, if they're operating according to their strategy, let's say they're a Generator and they've just been introduced to Design and all of a sudden they're living their life through "aha" and "uh-uh," and whatever the case may be, what they're going to discover is that that response is what is going to bring out that investigative teacher in them as a theme for their life process. This is what they are; this is what they're all about. This is their form. This is the thing that they live in as a consciousness. On the other side is the mind. And it's something that is very, very interesting to see about the way the mechanics work because the mechanics are so interesting.

We have a repetition of teacher/teacher, we have a repetition of guru/guru, we have a repetition of priest/priest, we have a repetition of prophet/prophet, of messenger/messenger and of Buddha/Buddha. But we also have the transition. In other words, when we're dealing with the 5/1/1/1, there is a variation of that which is the moving variation that's going to set up this next step. So there are two very different kinds of minds, the heretical/teacher minds, they're the same, but the lives are different. And the lives are different because they are going to be motivated differently. It is the motivation, after all.

The 1st Color: Fear

If you go back and you look here, this teacher that we were looking at, the motivation, the color is fear. Color is something that at the personality level is always going to be in transference. At the design level, if you're operating according to your Strategy and Authority it's not. So from the design side what does that fear mean? That fear is a motivation to master your environment, because that's really what it's about. It's not about being frightened in the sense that fear dominates you as a drive.

The only time you see that kind of fear motivation is from somebody who is a 4th color person over on the other side of the harmonic who is transferred. So most of our experience, that is, the world is not-self, with this kind of motivation has nothing to do with what it's really like because it's always being expressed as a transference which means it lacks cognition.

But think about it as a force. What we're looking at is that this force that is there driving one to master one's environment, that in this context it is something that ultimately leads to this expression—in other words, teaching. And you can see that teaching is an essential fundamental, it is a number 1 theme—1st lines, colors, tones, bases—it's a 1 theme, it's a beginning theme, it's a foundation theme. Understand that humanity would have gone nowhere without the ability to be taught and to have teachers. And that the mastery of the environment is one of the most profound teaching things we have. Don't go there, there is poison ivy, don't go there, there's bad snakes, we have checked out the environment. And in checking out that environment it is not that one eliminates fear, one masters it through mastering the environment. This is the motivation.

So the moment that you're over here in these complexities of profiles, because there are so many of them, understand the dilemma, for example of this being here as a not-self. They're a natural investigative teacher if they're operating according to their Strategy and Authority. If they're not, this isn't even the question any more. They're operating out of the transference of this and wherever it takes them, and living off the generic of that 1 underneath—the not-self life, not being able to fulfill themselves because they cannot live out their drama.

When you're a player you have a role. And it is the thing to grasp about purpose and profile is that it lays out your role for you. It simply does. This is the thing to grasp. It just lays it out. And of course, that role is quite complex. And the beauty of operating correctly is that you begin to live it despite what you think.

So, when we're looking at this line/color profile here, what we know is that the moment this person begins to operate correctly according to their Strategy and Authority the investigative teacher is who they are becoming, and what does that mean. Literally what that means is that they are motivated to grasp things, they are deep investigators, we have a resonance here between the line and color. We have the 1st line design, 1st color design, we have this deep resonance. So here is the potential to be a very, very profound investigator.

And yet always remembering that the motivation isn't simply that one is mastering this alone, after all, it's a 5/1, it's a transpersonal karma. This is a natural environment, a wonderful place for a teacher to be, to be able to expound on their investigation, and to be able to illuminate others. This is all part of the drama that's here. You're going to be the investigative teacher, and you're going to be the investigative teacher that manifests or responds or waits for invitations, or whatever the case may be, all operating through whatever the Strategy and Authority happens to be.

And it is a specific quality of this specific 5/1. But the fact that they enter into their Strategy and Authority correctly, and that the investigative teacher begins to emerge as their movement in this life, they still have to deal with mind. And of course, if the personality is in transference, this heretical teacher, this whole teaching business is out the window. What we're going to have is something entirely different, we're going to have blind neediness, you're going to end up with a transferred mind, and you're going to end up with a mind that is totally absorbed in all the things that it thinks it needs rather than being aligned to what in fact it is investigating.

Seeing

The conflict is about seeing. This is what it's about; it's about seeing. The moment that the mind is absorbed in decision making, the moment that the mind is fulfilling its not-self illusion is the moment that the mind cannot see. The heretical teacher in this case cannot emerge, just simply a needy mind being driven by its openness. And of course, that needy mind is going to try to distort what the investigative teacher is going to look at and talk about. Even though they're operating correctly there will be this struggle within them—well, maybe we should learn this because we need to know this, when in fact need has nothing to do with the way in which their mind should be operating relative to this life. But anyway, you'll see, because we will go through all of that rather deeply.

Looking at these variations begin to see that there is this tremendous complexity there. And by the way, each and every one of these is truly different. There are six tonal variations of each on either side. And of those tonal variations there are five base variations on either side. And you begin to grasp the sense that this profile that we talk about is not just these 12 numbers and some kind of easy 12 sign of the zodiac kind of layout the drama. Yes, it's useful; we know that. You all know that.

It's one of the first "aha's" that people get when they learn Design when they begin to grasp profile.

But this is another level. If you really want to begin to see the drama, here you begin to see the drama—the heretical teacher and the heretical guru and the heretical priest and the heretical prophet and the heretical messenger and the heretical Buddha, and boy are they different, and how different each of those lives are. They're different.

The Science of Differentiation: The Costume

This is the science of differentiation. Here is the opportunity to really begin to see profile and to really begin to see the costume. It's one of my favorite things to think about when you think about profile, it's a costume. You know what that's like—you watch a film and so much about the way people are dressed is telling you things, and it's designed to tell you things. They have designers who struggle creatively to create images so that people will grasp things from those images. These are costumes; it's so much a part of the role.

Profile is like that, it is a costume. I talk about how when you start your process your costume just doesn't fit properly. You know, the sleeves are too long, I don't know, whatever, it just doesn't fit. It takes time, it takes great serendipity. The choicelessness of fractal lines to have the good fortune of being able to wear it, to really be able to wear that costume and it's wonderful and it fits and it's you. You know that feeling when you put on a piece of clothing that you know is really you, it's just you. Well, that's what this is about. And it's about seeing that that you is something that is very, very, very specific.

Ok, let's take a look at, because this is something we're going to look at over the next weeks, let's go back here for a moment and take a look at these terms and begin to have a sense of them. We've already looked at because this is just an overview, roughly at what teacher is and how important it is to recognize that without the purity of this motivation it's very difficult for us to move information across generational lines, to break through barriers of resistance and ignorance.

Outer Authority

It is something to understand about this driving force that is there, that is this 1st color motivation, this 1st color determination. To really grasp that this is not simply about one's own potential to master or to make sense of or to come to grips with the nature of one's environment, but also built in is the need, the drive, the force, if you will, to share that with others, to empower them, whatever language that you want to use depending on the way it works in design, after all. There are all kinds of different teachers, in that sense, those that—and obviously the most profound teachers—again to understand things about mind. We have a dilemma with mind in Human Design because as not-self it really destroys our possibility to be able to perfect our process.

But once you've entered into a process where your Strategy and Authority is making the rules for your life there are all kinds of possibilities then for the mind. It is its freedom. And this freedom is to be an outer authority, what you get from me. That is, my mind has value for you. It does not have the same value for me. That is, my mind does not tell me what to do so it is no longer my inner authority. It hasn't been my inner authority for two decades now.

But it has wonderful outer authority. And of course, that's what it's all about. It's about understanding that when you look at the teacher and you look at this as a motivation and you look at this as a motivation for the personality, because for the design side it's simply a natural gift in terms of the vehicle that the gifts are there, the skills are there, the basic tools are there to be able to fulfill that process. But mentally is the opportunity to outsource it, to be able to put it out into the world.

Of course, this is where the dilemma of transference comes in because we don't have the teachers that we need, it's so obvious. The teachers that we do have are trained in teacher's schools to all teach the same things in the same ways. These are not teachers. They may be motivators, they may be socially valuable, and so forth and so on, but this is not what being a teacher is.

The 2nd Color: Hope

When you move to the 2nd color, the 2nd color is hope. This is perhaps the most misunderstood motivation, because again the hope motivation is never understood through the way in which it's intended to operate, but it's understood through its transference and the transference is guilt. In other words, people who have the 5, the 5th color, these are people that are always pretending, because that's all it is, not that they know that, they're quite absorbed in it, that they're hopeful and hopeful in a blind way because there is no cognition behind it.

It's something really profound to grasp about the nature of what the 2 is all about, what the 2nd color is all about, is really, on the personality side to begin with, it's really this to be motivated cognitively to know what to be hopeful for. In essence, to know what to wait for, to know when to wait for something when nobody else can imagine that it is something that should be waited for, but this is always the power of the 2.

There's something else to grasp that's very important to understand is that when we are looking at the design side so much of this is related to whether or not the vehicle is going to operate correctly and whether the vehicle is going to have its correct digestion. One of the things about understanding the role is that the role ultimately is only fulfilled when it's fulfilled holistically. And of course, diet and what we see in PHS, which is distinctly related to all of this, diet is very, very important. In other words, the correct PHS is going to enhance the vehicular potential to be this complete and unique investigative teacher. So, it's just something to think about in terms of that.

So when we look at this term "guru," because of course it has a lot of meanings to a lot of people. In Sanskrit it simply means "heavy," which in so many ways is what this is about because it is about the releasing of burdens. One of the things you notice about people who are 5th color who are transferred to hope is that their hopefulness is because they feel so burdened. It's the people who pray for a better day tomorrow, the people who dream of hitting the lottery ticket and spend their last nickel on it. There is this blindness that is there instead of this true power.

And of course, the great gift of the guru is that the guru knows how to penetrate through all of the mindlessness. This is the thing about 2s. The 2 theme is the theme of discernment from top to bottom when you move along the chain. And of course, this is the value of the guru, this is the value of—it is out of the 2 that the koan comes, this smacking, this possibility of opening up that one little crack that can actually be there, and it's part of it. But it's also essential to understand that this is about knowing how to wait for essential truths, knowing how to wait for those things that are correct to wait for. It doesn't mean doing nothing, and it doesn't mean being hopeful about everything.

The 3rd Color: Desire

It's like priests; we only understand the priests because we get them from the transference and we get all these holy fucking rollers, pardon my French. There is nothing more uncomfortable than a transferred Buddha who is a priest. Open up any new age magazine and you can tell by the photographs, there's this—anyway, I don't want to get into a whole trip over all of this, but nonetheless, I think you get my drift. It's deeply distorted.

This theme of the priest, this is about desire. Again, desire is deeply misunderstood because we only understand it through transference. Everything about being motivated by desire is about being locked into things, locked into them. It's one of the things to understand about the priest, there is this dogma to them, this locked in. I know it so well; I'm a 3rd color personality. I preach. You notice? Follow your Strategy and Authority or you're going to be destroyed by the not-self. I could do a whole damnation scene. Maybe I'll become a Baptist. Well, anyway, pardon my muse today, but nonetheless.

The 4th Color: Need

When you go over to the other side you go to the transpersonal and when you get into the transpersonal obviously you get into different kinds of karma and different kinds of relationships. Here when we're dealing with the 4, we are dealing with the prophet. This again—what transference does to these things. This is the theme of need. The only need we understand is what we get from people who are 1st color who transfer over here to the 4 and these are these crazy needy people who are always needy. And of course, it ends up blinding everything else that is possible for them. And they don't know what to need because this is not rooted in cognition.

On the other side of the coin is the true 4th color, which is need. Now, color transfers. It is a natural thing. On the design side it is stable; on the personality side it can always transfer. It's so important to understand that. It samples things. It's why the prophet is in here. But this is a deeply, deeply social configuration. It is the power of the 4th color displayed at the personality level that quite frankly makes life possible. It is the magnetic monopole that is able to take in with its attraction frequency the exit frequencies of the color information leaving the crystals. It is this transference, this ability to transfer color to the BodyGraph is all inherent and is key in the 4.

When you're looking at these prophets, because again all of these terms, you can play with them. People love to play with terms like this. My game is to deconstruct them, so we can see them practically because it's the practical that really matters about all this. Yes, we are all these things, and it's true and it's there. But we don't need to turn it into something it's not. Our uniqueness is ordinary. And the display of our uniqueness is what's expected, at least from the point of view of awareness. We don't have any real prophets. We have fearful teachers; we don't have any real prophets.

Of course, it's really something to see that here is a motivation that carries with it enormous influence. The expression of a time of false prophets, well, this has been going on for millennia and it's particularly accentuated in the nine-centered being. There are so many false prophets in the world today; just Google "prophecy," it's endless. And they're not real prophets. They don't operate correctly. They're not-self; they're operating out of the transference, they lack the cognition. And they don't live out what is in fact their true purpose. They don't live out their role; they don't live it out and have that potential of their cognition be displayed in both the way in which they live and in the way in which their outer authority operates with the other.

We're all here to be teachers, gurus, priests, prophets, messengers and Buddhas to each other. Without any of those being anything other than baker, candlestick maker, I don't think it makes any difference what label we put on it. What is important to understand is that this is what we're about to each other. We have very specific roles. And in the fulfillment of those roles is the power of us not only for ourselves to live a life that is correct, but to be able to enrich the lives of others. Whatever grace we have in this life has come through the serendipity of whatever teaching, whatever guru-isms, whatever priesthoods we've had. And none of them have been pure or correct.

It's one of the things that is so exciting about Strategy and Authority is that it is building the foundation for a slice of a generation and generations to come that will live out their role; will live it out. This is something that is very beautiful. I see how incredible it is, because one is helpless in it. I am helpless in what it is that my life is. You cannot imagine how helpless I am in this life. It's just so obvious to me that it is not something that I have any control over whatsoever.

And in the beauty of what it is that, in that sense, I've become, what I get to see day after day, year after year in this process is that I am my design. This is the whole thing. This is what we're here for, to live out what is the gift of the matrix that we're given this time—the gift of the vehicle, the gift of the mind. And not to be confused that somehow that there is this grand coalition between them; in essence, there isn't. That's the thing about us. We are dualities, we are. We live the illusion of a quantum. Everybody sees us as a whole, but we're not. We're this and that. We're always this and that. We're the life and we're the consciousness. The moment that the consciousness doesn't interfere in the life nobody can tell that the 2 is a 1, or the 1 is a 2, I should say. You can't tell.

Anyway, it's my Rave Cosmology night; I always wax philosophical on Thursdays.

The 5th Color: Messengers

Universalization is quite a theme, and of course here you're looking at the resonance at the color level. And guilt is an interesting thing because every time you tell somebody they've got a 5th color guilt personality they go, "Really?" because they're transferred to hope and hope is their thing. And of course, guilt is not understood because these are the fixers. They fix things, they deal with things, and they get in the face of things. This is what messengers are all about. I know that. This is what it's all about. You put yourself in—well, it's not so much harms way, as you put yourself in the way.

And the thing to grasp about that is that the messenger is here to universalize fixing—fix this, fix that. Now, obviously, the only universalizing fixers that we have happen to be people who are transferred from being 2s. They're supposed to be wise and hopeful in the way of the world and recognize what they need to wait for, and they end up spending their whole lives running around like idiots trying to fix everything.

And on the other side you have the 5s that are living out the 2, that instead of fixing things they're sitting around like idiots saying, well, it's all going to be ok, everything is just going to be fine. Transference rents your costume, tears it, soils it, and makes it so much more difficult for anyone to wear it with grace.

Our Mystical Mythological Nature

I'm a great admirer of The Bard, of Shakespeare. That the world is a stage is without doubt. That it is a vast magnificent drama, a drama that is nothing but mythology. There is no doubt, that each and every one of us has a potential to live mythology. There is no doubt for me. It is so clear. It is what uniqueness brings. It is what we're here, each of us, to bring forward, our unique mythology because that is what we are. And in this grand play each of us has a costume. We do have our role, we do have our purpose.

Obviously here we are not looking at the nuance of what this means through the specific gates of whatever that profile is going to be. And obviously, the way in which it works within the context of the design. You talk about nuance, differentiation is really differentiation. But for you it's not so much what this means for clients or whatever. Obviously all the knowledge is of interest.

But really, this investigation is about you having an opportunity to get a glimpse of the script. It's a script, in a way. It's not like it's all written; because it isn't. This is Human Design and this knowledge is not deterministic. It is mutative and evolutionary. But it is about seeing that as we incarnate, because of the imprinting system, in that sense the general script of the life is laid out, the parameters, the qualities, the potentials, all of that is there. It is the wonder of this knowledge, how much is revealed, how much can be revealed.

By the time students of mine have begun to digest line/color profile, I'll take you to line/color/tone and then you'll see how amazing it is, this differentiation. And when you finally got that, then we'll do it with the base. And when you have that we'll experiment with it in the BodyGraph. It's an incredible thing to understand how you can see this pure, pure costume, the way the playwright writes out the description of the character, that whole description, the costume, the look, all of that. It is what's there for us.

And obviously, it is a script only in the sense that it gives you the costume but you play the role. No matter how the construct is for me as a being, no one else is going to experience it and live it as I do. We bring our own magic to our role. It's one of the wonders of the actor/actress, this wonder of being given someone else's life, someone else's words, someone else's experience, someone else's mind and to find a way to make it your own. We all know that if you see a remake of a movie you see right away how obvious all that is, that no matter what the role as it is written that there is a unique spirit. It is the combination of our personalities and designs. There's this uniqueness of us.

So, it's not a trap for you. But it is the deepest you will ever be able to look into your mystical mythological nature. It's Rave Cosmology, after all. And as practical as this knowledge is, as practical as all of this is in terms of developing a genuine understanding of line/color profile, this is something that I have always wanted to introduce; you wait for the time to do that. And yes, it will have its practical value in the deeper programming, if you will, of information that we can provide, the depth of information we can provide.

But it's a key for you. For many, many years in my mystical courses I've always wanted people to understand that they're mythology, they are. That's what we are. The moment that you grasp what uniqueness is you have to understand that there is nothing like you. You're an essential ingredient to the whole and there is nothing like you. And there is a magic to live out what that being is. Not all this homogenized, everybody is the same damn thing, because basically that's what we have in life. People get stuck in homogenized roles. They just do.

And each of us has these wonderful possibilities that are there for us. And to see it in the mapping is to give you impetus, courage if you will, to stay with your process and to watch as a signpost that costume of yours fitting better and better and better and better, because that's what it's like. People have asked me a lot over the years ever since I introduced Incarnation Crosses, they all want a real explanation for it. And of course, there is none. It's a generic, after all. You talk about an Incarnation Cross and you're talking about so many possibilities underneath it is incredible.

One of the things to understand about your cross, your purpose, is that you do not find it, it takes you. Like the shining knight who lifts up the princess on the galloping horse, it just grabs you and takes you. You don't find it. You can realize it, realize its emergence, realize its presence, and begin to document its presence with your mind. Any time you can give your mind something productive to do that has nothing to do with making decisions, amen, go for it. This is what we're here for. This is what we're here to live out.

The 6th Color: Buddhas

Anyway, to get to the end of this little zigzag—[written comment.] Oh, no there's no choice, like it or not, it's how it goes—we get to the Buddhas. People like this. I have a Buddha motivation—good for you. The thing really to grasp about this motivation is how incredibly selfish it is; that's what you need to grasp. It is incredibly selfish. Now, when I say selfish, I do not mean to use that in a negative way, if you can imagine that, because it's not. I'm not saying that negatively.

What I'm saying is that despite the fact that this is a resonance to transpersonal quality that everything about this is about being isolated. Everything about the 6 is pointing us towards our truth. To be a role model one must be unique, that is the absolute truth. This is everything that the 6 is pointing us towards—the mutation that allows us to display, to reveal, to live what is our uniqueness. It is what makes the Buddha so interesting, no? After all, it is the uniqueness that is so fascinating. It is the uniqueness. And of course, this is a motivation to be unique, literally. And of course, it's always in transference so it's always caught up with desire and there is no innocence, there is only this lie, the distortion that comes with transference.

Anyway, as I said, this has been a week of introducing new and exciting and interesting material. We are going to have a lovely journey with this. You will see that when the download material is ready, and again it will be ready in about an hour, there is this Excel—really go into it. First of all, map yourself. Go in and find yourself in that. Just match your full chains, your line/color/tone/base chains on both sides, which you can do with your program and just match it to where you are in the structure. Put a line through it. It's in an Excel, so it's easy to do.

Then begin to map people around you, people in your life. Begin to look at it, begin to look at the deeper drama that lies underneath. You're going to find that it's incredibly exciting. It's really fascinating. I hope you have fun with the material and as always I enjoy these classes. I look forward to being with you all next week. You take care; bye for now.

Lecture Two

The Investigator Roles

Hello and welcome, we're going to begin our journey and we're going to begin our journey looking into the complexity, in fact, the extraordinary uniqueness that is inherent in what we call role; roles being related to profile itself.

The 1/3 and 1/4 Investigators

You can see by the titling that the titling is going to be a reference to the personality line. So, we're looking at investigator roles, and because we're looking at investigator roles we're going to be looking at two kinds of personality investigators. We're going to be looking at the majority, that is, the 1/3 investigators, and we're going to be looking at the 1/4 investigators. The investigator is the theme that is going to bind all this together so that we can actually go through this process and we can see the way in which it functions.

	Base	Tone	Color	Line
Profile 1/3	1	1	1	1
	2	1	1	1
	3	1	1	1
	4	1	1	1
	5	1	1	1
A sample from Excel of the variations of the investigator role	1	2	1	1
	2	2	1	1
	3	2	1	1
	4	2	1	1
	5	2	1	1
	1	3	1	1
	2	3	1	1
	3	3	1	1
	4	3	1	1
	5	3	1	1
	1	4	1	1
	2	4	1	1
	3	4	1	1
	4	4	1	1
	5	4	1	1
	1	5	1	1
	2	5	1	1
	3	5	1	1
	4	5	1	1
	5	5	1	1
	1	6	1	1
	2	6	1	1
	3	6	1	1
	4	6	1	1
	5	6	1	1
	1	1	2	1
	2	1	2	1
	3	1	2	1

So the first thing to recognize that as we go through we're going to have investigator roles and we're going to have hermit roles and we're going to have martyr roles, and we're going to be able to see them within their configuration that way. It means that we're always going to see the coupling of the basic profile with the transitional profile. In other words, the much larger profile—if you see the global survey, you'll see there is a huge population difference between any of the basic profiles and their transitional bridge.

So, here what we're looking at in this illustration is not all the possibilities, by the way, because we are not taking into consideration in this particular chain analysis tone and base as an example. And I'm sure that you have taken a look at it, and to what degree you've been able to work with it is another question, but hopefully you'll find your way through it. In the chains that I have given you in the Excel illustrations basically what you're seeing is that there is a tremendous variety, for example, let's just start up here, if we're looking up here at this combination there are actually many, many variations that begin with this grouping, but in fact differentiate based on tone and base.

				Investigator Roles
Color	Line	Color	Line
1	3	1	1	Martyr Teacher /	/ Investigative Teacher
2	3	1	1	Martyr Guru /	/ Investigative Teacher
2	3	2	1	Martyr Guru /	/ Investigative Guru
3	3	2	1	Martyr Priest /	/ Investigative Guru
3	3	3	1	Martyr Priest /	/ Investigative Priest
4	3	3	1	Martyr Prophet /	/ Investigative Priest
4	3	4	1	Martyr Prophet /	/ Investigative Prophet
5	3	4	1	Martyr Messenger /	/ Investigative Prophet
5	3	5	1	Martyr Messenger /	/ Investigative Messenger
6	3	5	1	Martyr Buddha /	/ Investigative Messenger
6	3	6	1	Martyr Buddha /	/ Investigative Buddha
1	4	6	1	Opportunistic Teacher //	Investigative Buddha

So what I've done here is compressed all of this and removed all of the tone/base variations just so we can see the line/color variation. So obviously when you're looking at the Excel you're never going to see it like this because I've compressed it. There may be 15 of these combinations, for example, like this going downward based on the tone and based on the base variations. So, I don't want you to get confused. What I'm doing here is compressing it so that we can actually see the fundamental shifts in the role itself. And this is how we see these fundamental shifts; we see it in this line/color chain, and the line/color chain within the context of the profile itself.

12 Variations

To begin with, something very interesting to think about is that if you look at the variations on let's say just the personality side, the first thing you'll notice is two teacher, two guru, two priest, two prophet, two messenger, one Buddha and the completion over here in the transition. Now, that gives you 12 combinations. The whole thing about 88 degrees is that you'll notice that if you go to the design side—I don't know why I have these colors reversed for you, that's terrible; this should be red and this should be black, but anyway—if you go to the design side there is one teacher, two guru, two priest, two prophet, two messenger, two Buddha, and then there is the teacher over here, which of course links back to the teacher over here.

In other words, there are always 12 variations, but 12 variations that can only be seen in the relationship between the regular profile and the transitional profile; in other words, seeing the two of them together. And whether you're looking, as we do, because our purpose is to investigate this through a set combination, we could put the 6/3 over here and the 6/3 would be a perfect fit in terms of this configuration up here. In other words, we would still end up with 12 and we would still end up with the perfect 12. In other words, there is no particular advantage in terms of orientation in a transitional profile in the relationship here between the 1/4 and the 1/3 that precedes it, or the 2/4 that is going to follow it, it has the same basic relationship to each.

But the moment you combine a regular profile with a transitional profile you're automatically going to see a variation of 12 different roles. And of course, this is the theme that we're looking at. Obviously, when you begin to work this out yourself, you can see clearly that patterns are going to be followed. It's just a pattern system. And we're going to see the pattern system repeated as we go through these various roles. They're all going to have combinations of what the various colors can bring. And those combinations are always going to run as binaries other than when they are either the first one or the last one. They're always going to run that way. So we get to see the shifting.

The Spiral

The other thing is the beauty of this is to see the spiral. The 2 here is not the 2 here. The first binary begins here. In other words, there is a spiral process that is working like this that just spirals its way all the way around and down, and so forth and so on. I don't want to distract you with all my squiggles, but I think you understand the point. In other words, you really have a spiraling of information as it moves and based on the way the retrograde system, the 88 degree retrograde system operates in Human Design, you get the same kind of staggering. In other words, you get this shifting that takes place, and of course this shifting is always really an indication of the life force at work.

The 1/3: Investigative Martyr

Now that I have sort of given you the basic mathematics of this, let's take a look at some interpretation, or values that are associated with this. First of all, let's see what we understand of this as we stand; in other words, the basic understanding of the 1/3, the investigative martyr. This is what we understand of the 1/3. And what we know about this is a personality that is driven to overcome its insecurities to be able to establish a strong foundation. And we know that that strong foundation is something that is a trial and error process because unconsciously they are constantly going to bang into things that may or may not be things that can be stable.

In other words, the 1/3 which is both lower trigram in its content is deeply, deeply self-absorbed, and it's trying to find security in a world that its unconscious brings it that is in fact always insecure. A beautiful way to see the beginning of profile is to understand despite the fact that the personality longs for a secure foundation, the vehicle knows that life can be a bitch, that things don't work the way they're supposed to, that things fall apart, that things break down, that people lie, that promises get broken, that hearts get broken, and on and on and on and on. So you have the way in which, in essence, the life program is set.

The Personality

Remember, we're looking at a role that somebody plays. Profile is something that is very valuable when you look at anyone. It's one of the basic tools in analysis. So, let's look at the variations and see what happens. For example, let us begin just simply with the personality. And in starting with the personality, obviously the obvious, that is, they're all investigative. This is what they're all about. But they are there to investigate in different ways and for a different purpose.

One of the things to grasp about the personality is that if we see the personality within the context of what is correctness, then the personality is about outer authority; in other words, the value of mind in terms of its value to the other, not as the source of decision making. So, here when we're looking at the role of investigator, not simply to see that role in the context of what kind of costume it brings, but also how it is an indicator of purpose.

The Teacher

So let's begin with teacher. When we're talking about teacher we're talking about the 1st color. When we're talking about the 1st color in terms of the personality we are talking about a motivation of fear. This is a fear motivation. So there is fear in this role.

It's one of the most interesting things about the nature of the teacher is that the teacher is afraid to stand alone. It needs the other to make sense, understand, and know what it means. And that if the other is in agreement then there is this security that emerges. And it means that if you are going to be a teacher then you are going to be a student first. You must be, obviously. It is an essential ingredient. There is no way to get to the teaching unless you go through the learning.

When you talk about a 1/3 profile one of the things that's often said about the 1 is the need for education. But you can see that this education theme is at its deepest and most profound when you are dealing with a teacher as an adjective to this role, or a qualifier of this role. In other words, this becomes the investigative student that ultimately as an outer authority can emerge as the investigative teacher.

When I say teacher I am not specifically talking about, for example, the role that I play. I'm talking about there are people who need to explain things to other people, who need to get their opinions across or their ideas or whatever. They need to get the other to grasp what they grasp. This is teaching. And of course, it is obviously an essential ingredient at the very foundation at the very beginning of the process of establishing this foundation.

And once the foundation is established, to recognize that the motivation is to express what has been grasped. And of course, we can attach "other motives" to it, but the fact is that this is the bedrock of the development of the species. We will see that teachers are everywhere. That is the drive within us, the motivation within us to become more secure by sharing a foundation. That's what it's about.

And all of us, in essence, when a true foundation is established and it can be properly taught, all of us benefit—like basic writing, learning how to read and write, learning how to do basic mathematics, being able to share that foundation, to be able to empower—you notice I'm using all these various stream keynotes. The other with this is essential to the development of the species.

So obviously the 1 has a real value, but not all 1's are born teachers or, in that sense, when they're correct and they are mentally aware that their greatest value is to be a teacher of others. So, when you're looking at a 1/3 and you talk about the need for education, you also have to see that you can be much more precise in that. It is deeply, deeply important here. This is the investigative student before it ever becomes that teacher.

The Design

Now, there's a shift. We have the investigative teacher, so we have the same personality. But we have two different designs. Again, we understand the thematic underneath. We've got the thematic of the martyr. And we know in that context that the whole thing about the 3rd line being is that the 3rd line being is deeply powerful. This is a very powerful body, by the way, within the PHS context of the 3. This is a body that can take punishment. This is a body that can take the hard knocks, this is a body that can deal with the vagaries of bonds made and broken, and failed attempts at discovery. Yet, this is a vehicle that is natural, that is very natural on the material plane.

When we think about the nature of strategy and inner authority it is here that we see the authority. It's here that we see the authority in a different way. When we looked at the investigative teacher we were looking at the potential of outer expression. In other words, a kind of personality that is always, once it's grasped something, trying to teach you what it's grasped. It's a quality of personality. It can be everything from enlightening to nauseating. It's the whole spectrum. The not-self is quite weird.

But on the other side of this is where the real authority for the life lies, and it is a physical infrastructure that is being dealt with here. I mean, what we're talking about in essence is that we're talking about a brain system that can support the requirements of teacher, a brain system that can support the requirements of teacher. And all brains are different. And unfortunately they're deeply homogenized so they tend to function in the same way.

But the fact of the matter is each of us has a potential for differentiation, that is, a differentiated brain system in the way in which it operates, the efficiency of its operation, the extent of its neural activity, all of these things. Now, we're not looking at the rooting of this because it would require us to go down to the tone level and of course that would turn this course into a year-long program, and that's not what it is.

But I do want you to grasp that when you are looking at the role, you have to see that when you're looking at the design, the design is actually pointing to what the role is going to look like in the life. Don't ever get confused about personality. Personality is what you get as an essence from somebody when you communicate with them. But this is their life. These are the cards that they're dealt. Let's put it this way: you have a guru body and your personality wants to be a teacher, so there is a conflict.

Now, I'm not suggesting for a moment that's bad. What I'm suggesting is that it's different. So the thing to recognize is that you've got this investigative teacher with the martyr teacher; it looks great. The martyr guru with the investigate guru, the martyr priest with the investigative priest, the prophet with the prophet, the messenger with the messenger, the Buddha with the Buddha and the shift in between.

And it's the shift that obviously creates a difference, because there is not this resonance in the themes. In other words, a resonance that brings a certain ease to the potential of the expression of what this is. It's much more complex with the guru body to be that teacher. It's different. And what you see in here, these are like mini bridges between these standard themes that are perfectly resonant. So, you've got the martyr teacher body, so you have a martyr teacher brain system, and that brain system is perfect for supporting that personality and its expression. It's perfect.

It is the resonance underneath that bonds the investigator and the martyr into a unit that is relatively harmonious, because there's no conflict, there's no dilemma. But there's something else. There is no true creativity. It's one of the things that I've learned about transition, the magic of the 88 degrees retrograde in the calculation of Human Design. If it were 90 degrees everything would be frozen. So everybody would be locked the way you see this lock, the teacher/teacher, the guru/guru, the priest/priest, the prophet/prophet.

Investigator Roles
Color	Line		Color	Line
1	3	1/3	1	1	Martyr Teacher / / Investigative Teacher
2	3		1	1	Martyr Guru / / Investigative Teacher
2	3		2	1	Martyr Guru / / Investigative Guru
3	3		2	1	Martyr Priest / / Investigative Guru
3	3		3	1	Martyr Priest / / Investigative Priest
4	3		3	1	Martyr Prophet / / Investigative Priest
4	3	1/4	4	1	Martyr Prophet / / Investigative Prophet
5	3		4	1	Martyr Messenger / / Investigative Prophet

6	3		5	1	Martyr Buddha / / Investigative Messenger
6	3		6	1	Martyr Buddha / / Investigative Buddha
1	4		6	1	Opportunistic Teacher // Investigative Buddha

It is smoother—I guess is a word I could use for that—but it's not creative. It's not out of the box. The guru body with the teacher personality, the priest body with the guru personality, these things are out of the box, because they don't fit. And of course, it becomes a dilemma. And you can see what the dilemma feeds. Catch the traps.

If you look at this, the thing to recognize about this is that because the underlying motivation and thematic of this role for the personality is in resonance to that of the body, it's a hell of a lot easier for this mind to live its not-self, the assumption that it's really in control. Now, it isn't to say that the transition—what they end up with is that they end up with a personality that is constantly trying to change that body, trying to get that body to be that teacher body, and it's not. And of course, these are beings that end up with very complex dilemmas.

But it also leads naturally to the possibility of awareness. What I understand in awareness is that what I think has nothing to do with what I am. These are separate things. My mind can be busy with something while I'm teaching you; they are separate things, they're not the same. And of course, the moment you're in this transition field where you have the shifting of the theme, the underlying shift in the design color and you notice, as you have the underlying shift the 1/3 becomes the 1/4 underneath at the design level.

Again, you can see the shift, it's happening at the design level. And it's this vehicle in its shift, this is what brings the possibility of true recognition as a potential of awareness. In a sense we have the basic binary. That is, the potential to be differentiated and the potential to be homogenized. And there is a tendency in both of these to go one way or another, but only a tendency, obviously. In fact, the vast majority of all of them live deeply in the not-self and the transitional roles are the most uncomfortable in the not-self mirror. Because when they look in the mirror they don't like what they see. If your personality is a teacher, you look in the mirror you want to see that teacher and you don't see it. You don't like it.

When you have the same themes underneath and you look in the mirror you think you think you see yourself, even though that in itself is an interesting joke. We're in very deeply nuanced country and at the same time in a really revolutionary place of understanding how the dynamic of role is played out. And for you to see whether you're this or you're that. It's just interesting to see the configuration yourself. But understand that the transition or the mutation or the evolution of the role is carried by these transitional movements. That's what they're about.

The Guru

Let's give you some brief terms for these various themes, because I haven't really gone through that. And obviously we'll go through it deeper as we go along, but I'm sure you're speculating about these things. The guru, a nice name, means heavy in Sanskrit, by the way. When we look at the personality guru, the personality guru is a motivation of hope. And the thing about hope is knowing what to wait for, knowing what not to interfere with. The great gift of this motivation is to know how to stand back and accept that there are certain things one can never possibly even imagine controlling and at the same time being aware that if one waits one will get what one deserves. Well, all right, however I phrased that.

This is the magic that the guru, in that sense, and I use this as a broad, broad generic, as an expression of mental authority, this is what it offers. That is, it offers the transcendent, it's all wrapped in glory, the transcendent hope that awakening and this and that are things that will come to you, that you need to know how to trust in yourself, in the forces; all kinds of things that are involved in this.

But this is not an outer authority that is rooted in the kind of education that is necessary for the teacher. There is a mystical element in being called. And of course, this is about the call. And in the sense of the authoritative personality if you are called you are a tremendous power, your ability then to take the information and move the information.

Knowing what to believe in, knowing what not to believe in, it's all part of the outer authority of the guru. But as a body, it is a different thing, after all. Again, when you think about it as a body you have to see that everything about this particular form, the way the brain system operates, all of this is focused on being able to affect, in that sense, the other.

You have to see that in order to be able to express any of these roles at their higher level, which is what we're looking at because this is underneath the generic, in order to be able to express those roles they have to be able to have the equipment to do so. And that equipment is brain equipment; it is sensory equipment, the many, many variations that lie underneath these zones, the many variations that lie underneath the guru/guru. Those variations are sensory. They take you down to the tonal level. They allow you to understand what is the sensory system that is the force here.

And of course, this is a vehicle that is a discerning vehicle rooted in taste. This is a vehicle that is very, very, very restrictive and selective. Now, it's perfect when it's the guru/guru. It's the priest/guru's who make fools out of themselves, not that I want to give them a hard time.

We look at profile from the basic entry point of Human Design, this is just a simple kind of little key for people to sort of grasp a large concept. It's not expressed in terms of personality and design, not at all. Other than the fact that you say that somebody is an investigative martyr, in that sense. But I mean it is not spoken about in terms of the mind and the vehicle. And it's not understood in that way.

But if you want to understand the roles, you have to understand what the difference really is. You cannot lump this together. And you have to see that in the case of the guru body that this hopeful system, this system rooted in taste is going to be the authority in making the decisions for the life. And whatever the personality is it isn't going to have any choice but to go along with it. And it means that the resources that it's going to have are different. They're not limited, but they're different. They don't have a reliable resonance to tune into.

So this is a mind that is going to struggle with, why do I have to be in this costume. I should really be in another body. I shouldn't be in this body. I should be in that teacher body or that guru body. Again, don't take me out of context. I'm not really talking about the body, I'm talking about the brain system and I'm talking about the way in which that brain system, the result of that in terms of the vehicle and the way in which the vehicle literally moves in space.

The Priest

When you look at the priest, and as I said I will go deeper into all of these as we go along. When you look at the priest, again you have something that is very powerful. At the design side the motivation is desire. And of course, when desire is correct it's a lock. And of course, the investigative priest, these are the ones that preach to you. They do. And all of it is in order to lead you. Whether that's good or bad, it is the way in which it works. That is, within the context of the totality, the way in which things get done is that there are wolves and sheep.

And of course, the priest is wolf-in-training, because it is—I was going to say a moralistic preacher, and in a sense it is. Something to grasp about all of these investigators is that they're all trying to compensate for insecurity by establishing through outer authority a foundation that others can agree to. So, the teacher tries to teach them the foundation. The guru tries to inspire them with it. But the priest does everything in its power, in that sense, to manipulate them into accepting, whether they agree or not.

One of the things that is very powerful in the not-self and in disarray with this kind of motivation is that we have a world in which 6th color beings are the ones who are trying to be leaders. Without the cognition they can be really cruel and not care whether or not the other is concerned or it bothers them or they understand it or they don't understand it. And of course, we see a lot of this as an example in the new age. It's just one of those things that is there. The investigation into this thing or that thing leads to an outer authority that says that this is it whether you agree or not. And if you're not with us you're against us, and all of that stuff.

I don't mean to make it a negative, I think all of these things are negatives within the context of the not-self, because they're not. I'm a heretic priest. I understand what that force is. That is, I understand the temptation to say, this is it. And yet, at the same time, everything about this knowledge is that you have to prove it for yourself, you have to become your own priest. So there's ways of seeing this in different contexts. But I think more than anything else you need to see the negative in these before you see the positive so you can grasp how far away the not-self is from its essential roles.

The Prophet

When we get to the prophet we are moving into a different direction, we are getting into upper color, we're moving into a much more transpersonal environment. And there is nothing more unstable in that sense than the prophet. The moment we are dealing with the prophet we're dealing with the 4th color and particularly from the personality point of view, 4th color is always something that is ready to transfer. So this can be very, very unstable. The thing about the prophet is that the prophet is only concerned with one thing. The prophet has the ability as a classic 4th line in the sense that it has the ability to be able to influence those that it knows. In other words, it requires a connection to them.

This is all about need as a motivation. That is, true need; to know precisely what the other needs. The investigative prophet has the potential as a role to be somebody who through their research, through their grasp are able to guide the other, tell the other, answer to the other precisely what they need, precisely what is necessary.

This is something that becomes terribly distorted when this is not-self, because the motivation is gone. That is, this ability, this drive to be able to just deal with the necessities, recognizing the necessities, understand the necessities. These are beings that can make surprising discoveries in their investigation because they're looking for something very, very specific. And obviously, if you have a prophet design, that is, if your design color—you're dealing with an upper color, you're dealing with a 4th color—all of those colors on the design side are only really going to function at their optimum when they're following their PHS. They have very basic diets in order for their bodies to emerge.

If you have a prophet body, which means that basically what you're looking at is that your digestive system is demanding that the circumstance of your eating, the environment of your eating is very important for you and you're either on one side or another and all of that is rooted in some kind of sensory system, I want you to grasp that when the vehicle is correct the platform is there and it's very, very specific. It's why these transitions are so interesting. More than anything else, they're so interesting, because they are the best living examples of people that—I think that 10 years from now, in terms of Rave Psychology if we look we will see that the people that are really ready to make the leap fastest, the ones that are ready first, generally speaking, and only generally speaking are going to be those that have this transition where the role of the vehicle is in conflict with the role of the personality.

The fact is that they can both live together comfortably without any problem in correctness, because after all, if you don't need your mind to make decisions in your life, your mind can have any trip it likes. That's why these transitions are so important because only out of this are we really going to see the expansion of the potential of all investigative roles.

We need our investigators, particularly the 1/3's because 1/3's are the most important investigators that we have. And I mean that in the sense of all investigation—the 1/3's and the 1/4's and the 4/1's and the 5/1's—the 1/3's are the ones that can really find out if something is really solid or not because they are really designed for it to fall apart for it to break down, that is what they're all about.

And when you have an advancement in the level of investigation so that more and more secure foundations are being laid out, all of this is for the betterment of humanity. It's the whole point. We don't benefit from all of the possible investigators that we have; and again, to see that all of these investigators are part of families of roles, these roles that we see in here.

By the way, because I'm not touching on it in this course, there are all kinds of mystical versions for the understanding of each of these themes. But it's really important for me that this course, despite the fact that it's part of Rave Cosmology that this course is inherently practical and that there are students in Human Design that can work with this level of information so that these nuances become something that eventually are more commonly understood. I want you to get the surface of what these keys are about.

The Messenger

It's like the messenger. Everything about the nature of the messenger is that the messenger is the guilt force. At the personality level the messenger is here to get you to change. This is what the messenger does. This is what its outer authority is all about. Its outer authority is there to get you to change.

Now of course, if the investigation has been lousy, whatever the case may be, not all messages are the right message. And not everybody gets the right message, and so forth and so on. Not all messengers, in that sense, because of the nature of their design, because after all there are so many elements to look at in somebody's design whether or not they actually get to that place in which their investigation leads them to something that is worthy of calling others, because that is what the outer authority is about.

And you can see that everything about the messenger, everything in that sense about the messenger, is that it's trying to change the world. That's what messengers do. They try to change the world; I know. And when you have a messenger vehicle—and again, to understand that at the simple practical level, these are very acoustically sensitive beings, interestingly enough because they're the ones who make the call, they have a very specific way in which they can operate correctly, and all that means is that this is a vehicle that is going to be deeply suited to being able to provide the message if the personality goes along with it.

Again, you can see that the program is run by the resonances—the teacher/teacher, the guru/guru—this is what influences the program the deepest because they are really locked in. The messenger becomes something quite different as a personality when it's in a different body. And of course, the Buddha body, the light-sensitive body—isn't that cute—this is a very different kind of form. So what we're looking at is this very odd relationship between personality and design.

The Relationship between the Personality and the Design

I've been trying for many, many years now to really get people to grasp that your personality and your design don't really have anything in common. It's the magnetic monopole that is the agent. And that the design, in particular, has a specific relationship to the monopole, because obviously from the moment of conception there is only design crystal and monopole for first two trimesters if it's a normal process. This is just simply the design and its relationship to the monopole. They build a life.

And there is this personality, this passenger, this person taking a ride that gets into the backseat of the vehicle. The moment it gets into the backseat of the vehicle it says, hey, this is all mine. They're not in any way; they're different from each other. This difference is something that really comes to the surface in those roles where you have transition. Because in those roles where you have transition you have personalities very uncomfortable, more uncomfortable with their vehicles than the other personalities who think they are in charge of their vehicles.

One of the things that I rail against is vanity. And those combinations—teacher/teacher, guru/guru, same/same combinations—they're the vain ones as not-self. They're the ones that are sure they're in charge of their life and things have only gone wrong because it's time to decide to do things right, whatever the case may be. This is where the vanity is.

And where the dilemmas are that can lead to real interest in breakthrough is in the mix, where the body and the personality roles they conflict at the color level—two sides of the coin. With the not-self, by the way, it all functions incorrectly. But I want you to see that out of the not-self has to come those—we were all not-self—there has to be doorways, entry points, satori moments, epiphanies, whatever it is, and for me these things always must be mechanical. There is something in the nature.

And I don't think this is the only thing, but I think this is one of those primary places where if we do a survey—I had an incredible afternoon today with Asi Farran, our programmer, working on what we're going to be calling Advanced Imaging—PHS and Rave Psychology and holistic programs to go into deep, deep levels of the information, and also to have statistical aspects in the program to be able to chart these things, to be able to see it.

I'm convinced, for example, that if we do a survey of all of the newcomers, we have about quarter of a million who have come through not the newcomers zone, but just downloading a free rave chart, if we do a survey of that I guarantee you that more of those people, I don't know what the percentage would be, but more of those people are going to be transition in their roles than they're going to be resonance, because they're the ones that are much more uncomfortable with their personality, in that sense, within their vehicle.

They're much more aware that there is something wrong with their life, funny enough, because they don't allow their life to emerge. They're always trying to see it through the lens of whatever their personality happens to be. All the other sees is the failure of the vanity, because eventually the vanity of assuming you are in charge of your life it catches up with you no matter who you are and no matter where your state of kings is on the material level or the fame level or anything else, it does catch up with you.

Transitional Profiles

Anyway, before I go out I want to look at this for a moment because this is something that we're going to see over and over again and it's really fantastic. You notice all of these variations that are here for the main profile, all of these

Investigator Roles
Color	Line		Color	Line
1	4	1/4	6	1
Opportunistic Teacher// Investigative Buddha

possibilities, all of these 11 different variations. There are 11 different variations; here's the 12th and it is in the transition profile. So, all 1/4's are this.

To begin to understand how different these profiles are, how different the transitional profiles are, they're not just smaller in population, smaller in arc, in that sense, but they're fixed. They're really fixed. Every single one of them has a 6th color personality and 1st color design. Now, yes, there are tonal and base variations so they're there. But there is only one category. It means that every single transitional profile is going to have the same thing. That is, it's going to have the same thing, not necessarily in the context of the line, but in terms of the color combination, this combination of the Buddha and the teacher. These transitional profiles are so important to the development of consciousness.

By the way, there is something extremely odd about the 1/4 profile. I mentioned it on the radio this week or last week. If you go to the global survey and you take a look at profiles broken down by type you'll see an incredible anomaly. That is, the 1/4 profiles—normally in the population 8.35% of the population is Manifestor. And in the 1/4 profiles 39.74% as of this morning are Manifestors. Now, go figure that. Honestly, I cannot understand what that is.

Other than the fact that they're 1/4's, so there is a deep need to investigate in order to find one's opportunity in life and ultimately to be able to externalize. Maybe it has to do with, oh, I don't know. I don't want to get off on that. Nonetheless, it's very odd. You should take a look at that, just see it for yourself, it's quite something to see. And I've had it checked. It's not a programming glitch or anything like that. It's a legitimate statistical anomaly and it's fascinating.

By the way, the global survey is quite incredible, but it's not an absolute. That is, people have to come with the intent of visiting the Human Design Newcomer Zone in order to be able to gain access to filling in a chart. So it is not a random survey. Based on random surveys that have been done mathematically with just basically a computer program running a spread, the variants are about 1-3%. So, it's not accurate in that sense. So obviously there is something in that nearly 40% being Manifestors, there's something that particularly about Human Design that must appeal to 1/4 Manifestors because it's totally out of proportion.

By the way, the corollary of that is that 3/5 profiles are very weak in terms of the number of Manifestors. In other words, there are much fewer Manifestors that are 3/5's than in any other profile that you would look at. It's nice and wonderful little information coming to you from the global survey. Anyway, never mind. I don't know what my muse is up to.

The 1/4: The Teacher Vehicle

If we look here at the 1/4 what I really am interested in is this combination here. This is the teacher vehicle. And of course, where we're thinking in the context of the Buddha how Buddha is understood here, we're seeing that from the personality point of view. This is a motivation of innocence. Innocence is something that is deeply, deeply selfish. In other words, this is an investigation that is very selfish. It is an investigation only for oneself. There is no intent in that investigation that it's designed for any outer authority. It's just investigation as part of being, as part of the prana of life.

Of course, it is the brain system of a teacher. In other words, there is this potential within this vehicle to be able to educate the other. There is no desire from the personality to get involved with that at all. Of course, one of the things to recognize about the transitional profile is that the transitional profile is not intended to be a prejudicial vehicle. In other words, if you see it as a chain moving the information of the 1/3 and its deep complexity, on to the 2/4 and its deep complexity, that the 1/4 is there to act as a pure innocent carrier of information; nothing more, nothing less.

And of course, we have the terrible dilemma, which we have had, which in fact is probably, if you want to point a finger at why the program is the way it is and why life is the way it is, you could probably point your finger to the personality here of all transitional profiles who rather than operating through the purity of that selfish innocence operate through a desire that lacks cognition. And instead of being the pure broker, instead of just being a bridge and nothing but a bridge, an intelligent bridge that moves things not for its own purposes, just simply moves them, what we get instead is desire coloring all of that. So, we don't have the same kind of movement of information from one profile chain to the other. In fact, when you think about humanity as a whole this is how information moves through the human community, in that sense, it moves through this chain, endless chain of profile.

So today you've learned something very special, truly. It's something that has never been discussed and it's never been pointed out. And it's something to really grasp about the difference between the resonance and the transition in the impact of color on role. Herein lies a basic duality in the way in which types, specific groupings are going to operate. And a way also of being able to see predispositions in terms of the way in which they're going to handle their life in terms of the not-self, whether they are going to operate through the vanity or always be lost in the suffering and the searching.

Roles at this level are genuinely fascinating. Anyway, I hope you enjoyed that. I look forward to coming back next week; we'll take a look at 2/4's and 2/5's, the hermit roles. To all of you do take care and bye for now.

Lecture Three

The Hermit Roles

Ok, it's my serendipity, I guess it's my serendipity this week, one is choiceless in this life, but it's my serendipity to have a lot to do with the 2's, the 2nd tones and the 2nd colors and the 2nd lines. Though I've been discussing it throughout the week, but I will sort of try to round all that up as we begin our process of looking at the hermit roles to begin to understand the deep, deep significance [that shouldn't say 1/3, by the way; here's my quick fix in the moment, sorry about that]—anyway, it's about 2/4's and 2/5's.

I come from a perspective of 1's. It's what I'm about. It's the nature of my design. I have ten 1st lines, I have a 1st line design sun/earth, I have 1st line nodes. 1st lines are basically the infrastructure of my filtering system. The 1st line comes with its baggage, as every line does. That is, first of all it's coupled with a binary. That is, in understanding the structure of the hexagram that we commonly see the hexagram as a binary in the sense that it is an upper and lower trigram. In fact a deeper understanding of the hexagram is to recognize that it's three binaries. That is, the 1st and 2nd line, 3rd and 4th, 5th and 6th.

The 1st and 2nd lines are in essence a yin and yang to each other. They are a polarity to each other. So where the 1st line is deeply involved in its insecurities, its investigations, its ponderings, its scratchings, all that stuff that comes with being 1st line, the study, all of these various things, that from the perspective of the 1st line when you look at the 2nd line it's annoying. It's sort of—I gave that illusion the other night—it's like the story of the ants and the grasshopper. It is something really to think about when you're thinking about the 2nd line. The 2nd line—the 2's—have a very, very different way in which they approach the world. It's totally different.

And from my 1st line perspective, because I look at them and I say, yeah, but they don't do the work—I mentioned this in Rave Psychology yesterday that the theme, the term, paper tiger, for the 2nd line being that gets called out and can't hack it, comes from the gleeful 1st line looking at it and saying, see, if you don't work, if you don't prepare, if you don't rehearse, if you don't do this, if you don't do that, if you don't put in this and that you're always going to have that possibility of failure.

And yet, from that 1 perspective there is no way to really grasp the essence of the 2. And it has taken me until the beginning of my work in the IHDS to really grasp for the first time, and that happened to me from the tonal level, how profound this 2 is and then to have the realization that it has been a key in my own process. I'll talk about that later because it's an interesting story and in Cosmology I always like to add some little tidbits.

The Nature of the 2

But anyway, I want you to understand something about the nature of the 2. Let's take a resonance journey. Let's go back to the 2nd tone. The 2nd tone is a cognitive sense; it is the sense of taste. And what makes the 2nd tone so unusual is that it is the bedrock of the capacity in humans to be able to deal with change and to deal with evolution. In other words, this is a sensory system that can notice shifts in the maia. So it is a very important cognition. It is the kind of cognition that not only is it sensitivity to what is yet not generally perceived in the maia, but in that sense it also carries with it the potential to deal with the complexity of problems that haven't even emerged yet. And to be able to, in the preparation for that, be able to extend the strategic power of the human capacity.

And everything about the 2nd tone is that it is deeply strategic, cognitively speaking in its nature, everything is rooted in survival. But this is not rooted in maintaining well-being; it is rooted in the acceptance of well-being and the preparation for transition or mutation. So, this is a very, very special cognition.

When you think about the resonance to the color, and of course, we're going to be looking here, as an example, we have a number of 2nd color roles that we're going to be looking at. And one of the things within the context of looking at this 2nd color, this guru color, is to really have a sense that this is about being able to identify what the other cannot grasp. In other words, it is a transition from its resonance to the color level. It's different; but, it is also the same. And it is also inherent in the 2nd color because the 2nd color is a transmission, in that sense, in that 2nd color to have the power to be able to open people up for a call. Not to call them, but to open them up for the call.

Most people think that they go to a guru to be called, but they don't. You go to a guru to be opened up so that you can receive the call. The best gurus try to shatter you so that you will begin again with an openness to being called. And of course, to be called in the purest sense is a 2nd line theme. When you think of the 2nd line and you think about the body, you have to think about Achilles. This is the 2nd line body. It is this perfect body, but there is always going to be that one vulnerability, always. And that body always has to be correct in order to avoid that one vulnerability becoming their problem, because we are dealing with roles and specifically the role of the personality in the profile that when we are looking at the hermit personality you have to see that this is a mind that is ready to be called, but only by something very, very specific.

Understand the basic dilemma. The basic dilemma is that if you are in transference you don't have access to your cognition. In other words, there is a breakdown in the transmission between color and line. And in that breakdown you lose the cognitive potential, you lose what's there underneath, which means that as a hermit you lose the intelligence you need, the radar, the sonar, the this "r" and that "r," that you need in order to recognize that one thing that's your call. You have to go all the way back to the tone, that 2nd tone. When you go all the way back to the 2nd tone you can see the magic in that.

The 2nd tone is there to sense the shift in the maia. To be more sensitive to the external environment than the other, to be able to recognize, discriminate those things, those aspects, that "it-ness" that somehow makes a shift in the pattern itself. So, when you're looking at a hermit, what you're looking at is somebody that in receiving the call they make a transformation in their life. Most hermits, because they don't operate out of cognition, in other words, the decision making is not being made by the vehicle, if you're a 2/4 or you're a 2/5 and your vehicle is not making your decisions you're in big trouble because you're never going to recognize that call that not simply calls you out, but calls you to something that is in line, in harmony with the shift in the maia.

The 2/4: The Missionary

For me the 2/4 has always been the design of the missionary, because it is one way to understand the incredible power inherent in the 2/4. We have the opportunist underneath and we know that the 4th line carries an enormous amount of influence. That its influence is externalized to those that it knows, that they are deeply influential in that role, that they are networking beings and the 2/4 is a natural unconscious net worker with a personality that likes to be enclosed because the personality, even as not-self recognizes because profile is profile it's wearing a costume that just doesn't fit. It recognizes that it's waiting for a call; it just doesn't know how to recognize what's what.

And of course, we know what happens to the not-self. If you're a 2/4 and you're not-self your mind is going to judge the calls that you receive based on the way your not-self mind operates, based on your open centers, based on your not-self strategies. You have an open heart center—I'm only going to accept the call that is going to make me worthy for others. And you end up not being able to recognize that call at all.

More than that, you get overwhelmed in a sense because the shift will come anyway. And "I told you so," doesn't bring many rewards. "And I knew it was coming," just sounds like, well, yeah, words. The hermit is something very special. There is this capacity in it to be in touch with what others are not in touch with. That's the gift.

I started off by saying that I'm going through a process of my own understanding of the significance of the 2nd line. A couple of years ago before I started this program when I began to do my own deep look into things, at the same time that I was doing that I was doing the filming for the encounter film. I remember coming into my studio in a break that we were doing in the shooting and I came into my studio and I brought up my chart, because I had been asked what triggered this, is there is a way to see what triggered it within the mechanics. My relationship to the program during the time of my encounter is really incredible; remarkable definition that was brought to me, in that sense.

Ra's 40.2

But I'm a 40th gate. I have a very powerful ego and I have a hanging 40th gate. The 40th gate is the gate of denial and one of the strongest things in its nature, because it's part of the mystical process, it's the gate of the denial of God. It is without question that the easiest way to describe me before my encounter was a nihilist. I certainly was not spiritual, religious, or mystical. None of those things had been part of my process.

Because I was smart, you didn't want to get me into one of those conversations that had anything to do with any of those subjects. My nihilism just bubbled up to the surface and I got really vicious and savage with my words when it came to those kinds of topics. And that's the 40th gate, it's a gate of denial, it's a gate of the denial of God.

I have the 40th gate, 2nd line. The tone of that line is 2nd tone. This is where I was called. The only way that I could be called was to have the very source of my denial literally smashed. You immediately stop being a nihilist when the forces are present. There's just not a hell of lot you can do about that; there's no argument.

The 2nd Tone

So, for me at that moment a couple years ago, when I realized what that was, when I actually grasped it because I had been doing work on tone for a couple of years before, this 2nd tone was something that I realized it was the whole core of the strategic human. As a matter of fact, the 2nd tone was the holy grail of the seven-centered being. It turned the seven-centered being into a dominant species. It gave it the capacity to be able to deal with changes in the environment, changes in social conditions, unbelievable power that was inherent in that 2nd tone. And it was the thing that sussed what nobody else could sense.

I made the analogy to that the other day about Sanduleak, the 20th anniversary of the supernova which was seen on earth at the beginning of February in 1987. Very few people realize, of course, that the information had been traveling for 165,000 years because the event took place 165,000 years ago, and it was only in February that it became available to the retina of the average human. The fact is, though, the information was there and that 2nd tone in that 2nd line in that 40 in my design in that moment was able to tune into a shift in the maia that nobody else noticed yet. And then the shift comes and 20 years later here are these thousands of people that come every day to Jovian from all over the place downloading charts and software.

The Hermit

It's an interesting thing. So for me it was sort of the final feather in the cap for my 1-ness to the 2-ness, this natural. It's a natural. It has to be because nobody else can master it until it arrives. This is a very, very special gift. So, here when we're looking at these hermit roles we need to begin to see this in perspective and to begin to understand that these are the true forces of not change, because that's what's interesting. They are the true forces of the announcement, the preparation for change.

If there is a hermit next to a village and the hermit stays in the cave for 30, 40 years and then one day the hermit is walking through the village, everybody wants to know what's going on. What made that shift, if you know what I mean? In other words, what we have here is the evolutionary glue for the human process. And that evolutionary glue is the responsibility of these 2's. They're the ones that are paying attention to the shifting of the maia. They're the ones who are watching the horizon. This is our radar on the future. It's our deepest protection; because if you don't know, if nobody warns you, you go down in the flood.

There is always a voice that says, wait, don't do this. This is what's possible here, this sensing of the shift. There are so many things about the Matrix films that image wise are so perfect for explaining things, this programmed world, and every once in awhile they're aware of a glitch. They see a shift in the environment around them, something repeats, or whatever. And of course, this is always a sign that their maia is changing, that something has changed.

It's very insightful and clever, as many things are in that construct, because this is really what it is. We actually have these beings that are here amongst us, and it is their job to stay in the cave until there is a shift, and then let everybody else know, let everybody who they need, who they can, let them know.

The Hermit Opportunist

So, let's take a look at this progression. Again, remember that we are dealing with this very interesting phenomenon in which we have these 11 variations that run through the main profile, and then the single variation that runs through in the transitional profile. And of course, again because you've seen the actual mapping you know there are many, many other variations that include each of these setups because of course we're not including tone and base in the chain and that expands it vastly.

Again, I've reduced this to the basic formulas so we can see it just in the context of line/color. So we're always keeping in mind, at least for these first 11 variations that we are dealing with a 2/4, we're dealing with a hermit opportunist. Here you can begin to grasp that the hermit opportunist is one that unconsciously develops a network for that moment when the call is there. And it is that call that literally—it's one of the reasons why the 2/4—my joke about if you have 2/4 child they're never going to leave home. They need to have this very, very secure environment so they don't have to think about it at all. They don't want to be a 1. They don't want to have to deal with it, they don't want to have to think about it, they don't want to deal with any of that so that they can be totally prepared for a shift that can take place, that they can sense it.

And of course, if they have the cognition, if they're operating according to their Strategy and Authority, they will have what is the appropriate response to the call. And then their mind has the potential to display as outer authority its wisdom to the other. But the call has to come, and it has to be the right call.

The Hermit Opportunist: Teacher/Teacher

So we have the hermit opportunist and we start with the teacher teacher. So, we have a 1st color, and again the 1st color if you think about resonance to understand that the 1st tone is all about building and maintaining a secure environment holding on to it, that the 1st color is the color of fear. It is a motivation that drives us literally to be intelligent in order to be able to control the circumstances around us in order to be able to survive. You take it to the 1st line and you get this investigator, you get this need to be able to have a strong foundation.

				Hermit Roles
Color	Line	Color	Line
1	4	1	2	Opportunistic	Teacher	Hermit Teacher
2	4	1	2	Opportunistic	Guru	Hermit Teacher
2	4	2	2	Opportunistic	Guru	Hermit Guru
3	4	2	2	Opportunistic	Priest	Hermit Guru
3	4	3	2	Opportunistic	Priest	Hermit Priest
4	4	3	2	Opportunistic	Prophet	Hermit Priest
4	4	4	2	Opportunistic	Prophet	Hermit Prophet
5	4	4	2	Opportunistic	Messenger	Hermit Prophet
5	4	5	2	Opportunistic	Messenger	Hermit Messenger
6	4	5	2	Opportunistic	Buddha	Hermit Messenger
6	4	6	2	Opportunistic	Buddha	Hermit Buddha
1	5	6	2	Heretical	Teacher	Hermit Buddha

So it's clear that when you're looking at this as a motivation that you can see that this is a dilemma here in the hermit. In other words, it is a hermit that in essence needs to do some study. It is a hermit that is going to be pushed to pay attention to certain things in detail that are not necessarily the most natural thing for a hermit to do. The hermit guru is perfect. Not if they're your child, by the way. You don't want a hermit guru child, I tell you, you don't. And if you do, you have my sympathies, because they're basically not going to do anything. You're going to be very concerned about them. They're basically not going to do anything until they get the call. But the teacher hermit will be occupied with certain things. It will look into things. It will be less secure in its waiting in that sense. And of course, you're going to have that at both levels.

The other thing, of course, is that when we see the teacher role at the unconscious level we're talking about the vehicle and we're talking about brain function. This is the caveman/cavewomen diet regimen. These beings are really healthy when they operate at a very simple basic level. But again, the teacher teacher in this context is not something that is typical of what we might think of as a hermit.

By the way, when I say that the quality of what the outer expression can be, in other words, what we get to see, for example, in the second variation here, the second variation of hermit teacher. But again, the body is different. It's the body here that is a restriction. In other words, the body and its sensory system is going to be very much oriented towards getting the data and you've got a general personality that literally just wants to wait for the call. What it's really suited to is teaching. Once it's received the call the outer authority of that mind to be the influential teacher, the influential hermit that people are going to listen to, that's where it can come out, but it's going to come out much cleaner when you're looking at the hermit teacher, opportunistic guru combination.

The Guru Body

Let's look at this shift at the design side. Again, always remember that we have this wonderful spiral, the way it works, these binaries that are running here, and of course, the shifting of it. It's always one down, so you're always moving through in a spiral.

In looking at this configuration when we get into what is the guru body, now the guru body is very discriminatory and it means that if this being is operating according to their Strategy and Authority, this is going to be deeply advantageous, after all it's a 2nd color, there is a resonance to the 2nd line that there is going to be this very important ability to be able to discriminate, to know what is to their taste.

Remember, because the body is going to be making the decision, what's left for the personality is how it deals with what is the byproduct of that decision. In other words, the decision is being called to something. Now obviously, when we're dealing with the teacher, the teacher has a very specific way in which it operates. All teachers are here to give you a foundation. If they cannot give you a foundation they are not a teacher. If they don't give you a foundation you can call them a philosopher or a bullshitter, but you can't call them a teacher, because only teachers provide foundations, that's what they're all about.

Now, gurus don't do that. We know that. And the guru wants to influence you with their call, they do, after all. That's what they really want to do. At the same time they have a capacity that allows them to influence the other that's very profound. It's why the guru, in that sense, can be very powerful.

If you go back to any basic description of the 2nd line, particularly in examples that I've given over the years of describing the lines of the hexagram as the structure of the house, always referred to the 1st line as the main floor, that is the floor itself, the foundation, the 2nd line is the room that rises up from the foundation. The 3rd line is its ceiling. And the 4th line is the floor of the 2nd storey and the 5th line is the room that rises from there, and the 6th line is the roof.

In that analogy, a way of understanding the relationship between the 2nd line and the 5th line in their harmony is that the 2nd line is like being in a room on the ground floor and all the lights are on and you're stark naked and it's midnight and the curtains are open and there's a parade going by your window. Everybody can look in and see you. As a matter of fact, you cannot look out and see them, because the lights are on and there is glare in the glass. Now, if you're 5th line you're upstairs, the curtains are drawn, the lights are off and you're peeking out at the parade below. They do not know that you are looking at them, but they have expectation of what could be, projections about what could be behind that curtain.

So when you're thinking about a 2nd line being, one of their dilemmas in life—it's why they like to be inside—is that other people are always looking into them and seeing oh, you could be this, oh, you could be that. Now, think about that 2nd line when it's called and it is the correct call. They just hum. This is perfect for them. And because the call will always draw them out—the 2/4 I'm speaking of—and immediately send them into the face of their network, those beings, when this 2/4 who has received the call steps into their aura, they see it.

That's what's so powerful. They don't even have to hear what's going to be said. They can look in and see that call. In other words, there is something that has happened. They can feel the shift represented in this being and the way in which they are operating.

The Guru Personality

When we look at the guru as a personality—we take the step—again, one has to recognize that the whole thing about the guru is to open you up for the call. And so they can recognize whether or not you are ready for the call. That's ultimately what it's for. It's why people can get so upset with 2/5's. 2/5's are the most reluctant of Buddhas. There's that 2/5 in the cave, and anybody who even passes by that cave is deeply seduced by what's in there. And if you have a 2/5 that's received the call, wow, is there ever going to be a projection on these beings. And if they don't come out of the cave—they're not 4's, after all, underneath—people are going to get really upset; but, we'll get there.

This guru personality, this is what the 2nd line being is all about. What they understand is protection. For example, the 2nd line mind carries a lot of barriers, armor, all kinds of things to protect it. And only a certain little area where it's open for that specific call, these are the barrier masters. You see that in the 59.2, in this gate of our sexual potential, you see the limitation here. There is a barrier that is part of what the 2 is all about.

So when the 2/4, this guru gets its call it has that ability to see your armor. It has the ability to see the dilemmas of your armor. In other words, it has the potential as an influence to affect you. Of course, this is all going to be relative to what has called it. It may be about telling you about mineral water, who the hell knows. It's all about what has called it; it's all about within the context of the gate and the design and where it is in the world and on and on and on and on. Don't get carried away with these descriptions. In this context, these are isolated formulas that later you need to synthesize into what is the BodyGraph as a whole.

The Priest

Let's get to the priest. The 3's are totally visually oriented. That's what 3's are rooted in. If you go to the 3rd tone you go to outer vision, you go to the strategic visual capacity. Inherent in all 3's is this visual capacity, this visual need for information.

When we're looking at the 3rd vehicle, though, and we're looking at it from the design perspective, we're looking at the hot/cold vehicle. This is something that they're very specific the way in which they operate in terms of their energy levels and many other things. When we look at the 3 in terms of the personality it takes on a quantum leap because it has the value of desire, which of course is deeply misunderstood.

The thing to recognize about the priest is that where the guru is called, the priest discovers. And the priest discovers what is, in the end, materially to its advantage. I don't mean to slander all priesthood, but in essence priesthood is a business. The 3rd line is material; it's always material, it's always going to be material.

Now obviously, when you see it within the context of desire within motivation of the personality, this is all about getting really locked into your thing. In other words, this is getting really locked into your hermit role; really locked in. Your desire is to fulfill as deeply as possible that hermit role. When it gets to expression, when this 2/4 gets its call, when it finally comes out of them, it tends to be, I was going to say dictatorial in a sense, it tends to be—it's all about influencing people to make more money. It's also about influencing people in order for them to make more money. Now, I'm simplifying it because it really is about the material plane.

So, one of the things to see about the priest is that this is a very material hermit. This is the hermit that is a geek in their hermitage and one day they get the call, they get that inspirational shift, they pick up a frequency and they have a brand new idea that they can turn into not simply a benefit for humanity, but a great big lovely benefit for their bank account, and perhaps for many others. So, don't take priest to the religious, specifically, because it isn't.

But it's really about understanding that they're the ones that end up setting the rules on the material plane. I can remember earlier Lynda asked me a question about whether they're related to the father or the mother/father in the sense that they lay out the rules. So they hire you or they fire you or they baptize you or they condemn you to hell. It's all these things that are in there; and all of it with their little network, because the network is always there.

The Prophet

When we move to the prophet, these shifts are always shifts to body first. One of the things about prophets is that they are either calm or nervous. It is the dietary regimen of the 4th color. The 4th color, as we well know, if on the design side the only way to deal with transference is to honor your Strategy and Authority. One of the things that is clear about the prophet is that in its relationship to the opportunist that we are dealing with the 4 theme, we are dealing with a resonance in the 4 theme. This is one of the great jokes about the prophet is that the prophet is never recognized in their homeland. That the prophet tries to influence those beings around them and fails, and eventually has to go out into the world in order to be able to find those that it can influence, to be able to create the network, to be able to do so.

Everything about the prophet is about organizing community through common activity and common roles. It is one of those things to see about in this context when you get the hermit prophet, as an example, you're really dealing with a force that when this comes out, when this missionary starts running, wow, can they be incredibly powerful. And of course, they can be very powerful because they carry this deep influence and the root of their influence is visible to the other because the other can look into them and get a sense of its truth.

By the way, one being's truth isn't necessarily everybody's truth. The one thing always to understand about prophets is that prophets are only prophets for tribes. The moment they stop being prophets for tribes is the moment that they stop being prophets. This is the nature of the prophet, is that its influence is limited to its community. And it's limited either to the community that emerges around it or the community that it is natural to. But it's always about influencing.

Whenever I say that, please understand that we're dealing with a hermit. And because we're dealing with a hermit, what they will teach, influence, make money from, all of these various aspects that we see in the motivations, understand all of that is based on one thing and one thing only, the call. And if the calls are not correct, and of course, this is the vast majority of humanity, you forget about all the subtitles.

What you get is the hit and miss, the deep misfortune that befalls most 2/4's to the point that they never want to get out of their hermitage, they never want to get out of their cave, they never want to get out of that environment because they're smashed back and they just give up. They don't think that the call is ever going to be there for them. Too many false calls, too many things that they thought were the thing for them. "This is going to be it, I'm going to do this, I'm going to that, and this is going to be it." Yeah, yeah. This is the sadness of the 2/4. We have the most horrendous missionaries on this planet. All these not-self 2/4's, all riding on their call, always assuming that this is it and it's not because if the call is not correct it's never going to be fulfilled.

The 5 Body: The Messenger

When you get to the 5 and we get to the 5 body, this is a body that is very sensitive to acoustics; it's very sensitive to sound. This is a hermit that is going to live in as much quiet and silence as they possibly can. It is one of their gifts, because the way in which the hermit vehicle is going to sense the shift in the maia, is that it's going to sense that shift acoustically. In the same way that the priest and the prophet, because both of them are related to visual aspects, the priest and prophet will recognize the shift visually. In other words, that's infrastructure. This is the way in which they are prepared to recognize these things.

When we look at the nature of this opportunist, this is an opportunist that carries with them—everything about being an opportunist is that you have to know how to invest your energy. That means you have to know who to invest your energy in. And the only way that you're going to know who to invest your energy in is if you're operating correctly so that you've got a strategy that your inner authority is going to guide you.

If you don't invest in the right people you don't get the right opportunities. And if you don't invest in the right people you end up spending an enormous amount of energy on them when in fact it's deeply, deeply inefficient. We see that at the line level with the 4th lines of burnout and fatigue and abdication, all of these lines of just having had enough. All of that is rooted in the not-self 4 in the way in which it just networks to network because it has no cognition, it doesn't have any intelligence behind it.

One of the things to be clear about the messenger body is that the messenger opportunist is going to have an acoustic sense of the other. It's a frequency that they are going to acknowledge. It's a frequency that they're going to respond to in their inner authority. Of course, if they're operating that way, trusting in that inner authority, then they're going to be able to have, as all the others if they're operating according to their authority, they're going to have those beings in their network that ultimately are going to provide for them.

There's no timeframe in that, by the way. There's no timeframe to when that opportunity is going to come. And of course, one of the things to see is that in this acoustic, and by the way, you'll have a level of this where not only the hermit that likes silence, the hermit that likes to sit with giant speakers and blare heavy metal, if you can imagine it, but yes you can.

It's when you get it to the personality that it becomes very interesting because the messenger carrying the 5th color quality, which is the quality of guilt, which is about conditioning, changing things, fixing things, when it's correct this is the hermit whose call is a universal message. This isn't the local prophet hermit, this is a messenger hermit. This is a hermit that once called can come out of complete obscurity and can touch the world with what it has been called to because it has recognized some shift in the maia. So, the messenger, in that sense, always carries this universalizing potential.

The Buddha

In the end we have the Buddha body, the Buddha opportunist. It's not the end, actually, because we have the 2/5 that follows, but the end of the 2/4's. This is a light sensitive body. These are either going to be daytime opportunist or nighttime opportunist. The thing that makes it so interesting is that the Buddha hermit, which is a great coupling, it's an interesting thing to speculate on what this could look like.

It's one of the things that you have to just accept, at least I do in my process, is that there are very few chances I'll get to see any of these variations in the flesh, and I'd love to, because they're interesting. And when I say see them in the flesh, I mean see them correct in the flesh so that one can take advantage of their wisdom, their outer authority. And of course, the Buddha hermit is very interesting because this whole role of Buddha, the role model, is the deepest and most selfish of all the roles.

That is, this is about the inner perfection of one's existence in which the outer world and the consequences of the outer world are present but are never what it's all about. The Buddha hermit is deeply absorbed within itself. And in essence, the Buddha hermit, Buddha opportunist probably never leaves the cave. That is, it doesn't have to in a sense, because like all 6's ultimately you're going to get recognized anyway. That is, they're going to see you. You are the fool on the hill, after all, and somebody is going to get you in their spyglass and that's how it all begins.

The 2/5

Of course, what happens is that that Buddha hermit that leads over into the binary jumps here, you can see that the shift from the 2/4 to the 2/5 is something that is taking place at the unconscious design level. So we have the continuation of this binary, but the continuation of this binary across the profile line.

LECTURE THREE

The Hermit Roles

So, that's very interesting because it's in these situations where we get the personality examples in two different profiles. It's the only place where that exists. So, you've got the 2/4 hermit Buddha and you have all the 2/5 hermit Buddhas because they're all hermit Buddhas. And this inheritance of this hermit Buddha, the Buddha that gets the call to be themselves, because that's really what it is. They get the call to be alive as themselves. They get the call to live their life as themselves. That's all, that's their call. So, their call isn't something that they have to offer anybody else. It's not like what they have to do to be them is what's somebody else—you know what I mean, it's just their call. They have been called to their own transformation. And that transformation is their focus on their own process.

So this is a hermit that says, I'm a hermit and I have nowhere to go, and yes, I've received the call and the call was for me. I love that. I can barely grasp that as a 5th line personality. I get the call and I run around trying to tell the whole planet. Here's the hermit Buddha—yeah, I got the call, but it was just for me. This is why people want to kill 2/5's. It's sort of like there is this smug look on their face. It's this kind of Cheshire cat stuff. It's like they know something and they're not telling us. And of course, a 2/5, with that window of people looking in, and they're looking in at that heretical teacher. The 2/5 profile is quite a profile. It really is. And of course, it makes it difficult for them. They are very reticent to go out into the world because they don't have personalities that see the point. They don't see the point.

And it's only when, in fact, that they can bond with the other, because this is not a 4th line being, this is a 5th line being. Only when it can bond with the other is it possible that the other can derive some wisdom from the hermit Buddha. Because, remember, the hermit Buddha is the hermit that you can trust, potentially. The hermit that you can trust to be Solomon, cutting the baby in half; the hermit you can trust to be absolutely objective and clear with you. But you see, they don't volunteer.

The Transitional Profile

This is where the saddest of—the not-self phenomena really gets crystallized when you understand that every single one of these transitional profiles are all 6/1's in terms of their color configuration—personality 6, design 1st color—that all of them are in transference to the 3. It means that they have no cognitive resource underneath. The desire cuts them off. It creates an enormous amount of distortion in the way in which the information moves in the chain; you see it's a chain.

The moment that we're going to move to the next step, to the 3/5 that 3/5 is going to begin with a heretical teacher design. It will be the next step. It's the continuity of the way all of this moves. Of course, if that transitional profile isn't operating correctly, well, the chain doesn't operate correctly. It just doesn't. And of course, I don't mean to put all the focus or pressure on the 2/5's or the transitional profiles, because in fact everybody is not-self. Well, just about everybody is not-self. They're all involved in the distortion of what the potential of this program can be, what our potential is, each and every one of us. That is, these unique capacities that are there that can be expressed through each of us. And the outer authority that is there, the gift of the call and how this call can be spread in so many different ways, these six archetypal ways in which the call goes out.

It is all about seeing that if you're not correct you miss all the fun. You don't get the entertaining movie. You don't get to play the full role. You get the comic book version. You don't get the juice and meat. You don't get to live out the totality of it. You get this stupid surface of it. Nothing works the way it's intended to.

Understand the Themes Underneath the Surface

Anyway, something to keep in mind that as you expand your knowledge of substructure, not everybody is deeply involved in the studies of substructure in this class, but the more familiar you are with tones and color and line, to begin to understand the resonances, to begin to recognize the way in which information moves, always beginning with the tone. And if you begin with the tone you'll see how the information moves and morphs. It does. The color has to deliver the cognition of the tone. But it uses its own dimension to do that job. And the line is an expression of that, but again, operates in its own dimension to be able to do that job. And yet, to be able to see the continuity thematically is to enrich your own understanding of these various aspects.

The work that I'm doing now, laying the foundation for year three in the IHDS beginning in September is that we're working on advanced imaging programming in order to be able to finally integrate all the deepest levels of analytical information into a holistic integrated graph in which levels from base all the way up are aspects that one can see in a way that provides you with an intuitive picture of the being.

To understand the various themes that lie underneath the surface simply enriches your capacity not simply to understand the nature of profile, but my personal example of my 40th gate and its 2nd line and its 2nd tone—by the way, it is 6th color in that configuration—is to see that there is a profundity of information that is in many places in the BodyGraph. This will be advanced teaching that I will do several years from now when we begin to look at areas that quite frankly I never thought I'd get a chance to teach, to get down to the basic complete image system to get all the information, to really see how it works.

Anyway, I wax. To all of you it's been fun; it's nice you're here. Have yourself an entertaining day and until next week, bye for now.

Lecture Four

The Martyr Roles

Hello and welcome to all of you. You can see today's subject. Today's subject is that we are going to take a look at the 3 business. The 3 business is really something. Anyway, let me just move to this illustration.

I think it's one of those things that is hard to really grasp because I think that like all 3's whether you see 3's in line configuration, in color, in tone, that there is always a mystery to them. It is the 3 that has this unusual gift of being able to find a way on the material plane. Not simply a gift for survival on the material plane, but an inherent persistence, a depth of pointed resource to keep moving towards something despite everything, despite pain and suffering, resistance and all of that.

It can very sad, by the way, when it is simply not correct and that for all of its best intentions it ends up being folly and it ends up being punished. But the mysteriousness that is there in the 3 is this ability, this capacity within it to be able to discover and to be able to discover what makes a difference, what changes things. It's the most interesting thing to think about in the context of the negative that we associate with the 3, that is, bonds made and broken. But of course, it is through that process of bonds made and broken that there is a comparative measuring that can take place that can lead to discovery, which can lead to the possibility of change, which ultimately can lead to the expression of power.

It's the one thing that we rarely talk about when we talk about the 3 in the profile is we rarely talk about the inherent power of that, the inherent power of that pointedness and the way in which that pointedness is perceived. And of course, here in this particular configuration where we're looking at personality dominated themes, so we're looking at the martyr roles in terms of the personality, we're obviously looking at 3/5's and 3/6's, and of course we've come to recognize now our pattern that is our spiraling through the color combination, the color/line combinations moving through 11 variations through the thematic of what is the profile of a 3/5 and then of course getting to the single theme that is there in all transitional profiles. And obviously, the complexity is going to be seen in the main profile.

The 3/5 Martyr Heretic

The 3/5 is a martyr heretic. It is a very difficult configuration. Again, I always make these cautions when I say things like that because I'm always concerned that some 3/5 is going to say to some 2/4 I suffer more than you do. I'd like to be there to slap them. Anyway, it's not about that. It's simply about understanding that every profile has its thing. That's the best way to phrase that. Every profile has its thing, every one of them has something that perceived from the negative is a burden that they have to deal with.

The thing about the 3/5 is that it seems so unfair. Of course, that is what's so obvious about the program; it's terribly unfair. And why it's unfair is that you've got this 5 unconscious. What the 5 unconscious does is that it attracts projection. After all we do not have conscious access to our design data. So, if you've got an unconscious 5 in your profile you don't have any access to that. That is, it's not who you think you are. It's not part of the way you're processing mentally which has mostly to do with your openness.

The fact is that you're not even aware of the fact that you're putting out a frequency that is attracting projection. There you are with your personality which happens to be a 3 personality which is Murphy's Law—3's know all about that. If anything is going to go wrong it will. After all, part of what they're here for is to be able to see all the things that go wrong. And to be able to make sure that others don't end up going down that same lost track.

But of course, what happens to a 5 when they are placed under pressure is that they need to fulfill the projection that is coming their way. And if they do not fulfill that projection in the way that projection is framed, then they're going to end up paying the price, and the price is their reputation—how they are thought of, how they are spoken of, amongst others. After all, it is as an element on its own. It is upper trigram, and obviously it is transpersonal.

And of course with a 3rd line personality you're going to end up with mistakes. It's going to make mistakes. It doesn't necessarily mean, by the way, that the mistake is a fait accompli. This is one of the problems with how deeply misunderstood 3's are and how they are abused for their process. The mistake is a way for them to get to discovery. Unfortunately for 3/5's there is so much projection on them that they're going to deliver right off the bat. It's my black joke, by the way, about 3/5 babies is that the moment they come out the mother think they're God and within 20 minutes she's changed her mind. And that's the way it's going to be. So, this is the dilemma of this personality.

The Martyr

The martyr is a very difficult term as a keynote to walk around with. What's your profile? Well, I'm a martyr. I'm sorry, I really am; but, that is the only way to really see this within its generalized, homogenized not-self lack of cognition variation, because that's what it ends up being.

Remember something about what the martyr is really about. That is, you can end up very easily being punished simply by not being able to pull off what is expected of you. And then you get punished for it. And regardless of whether your intentions are good or not, if you're a 3/5, by the way, you can have the best bloody intentions and nobody is going to care. They're not going to take that into consideration, they're simply going to be disappointed that you haven't been able to fulfill their projection. And that they are going to lay it on you that you are incompetent and inferior and then you take the punishment and you become the martyr. You're the one that gets beaten. And in most cases in the not-self, it takes very few external beatings for the internal beating regimen to take over. 3's can be vicious to themselves in the way in which they think about themselves, feel about themselves. All of this is the lack of cognition.

The thing to recognize about the 3 is that when it is correct it can bang into things or have things banged into it that don't work out. But there is always a silver lining if they're correct. This is how they discover. They discover from failure, they discover from mistake. It is what they're all about. And obviously, if they're operating correctly, if they're operating through their Strategy and Authority, then they're going to be able to align themselves to a decision making process that is going to free them from what is the martyr in all of this, the suffering in all of this. This is what gives the material life and the material plane this endless, endless tiresome description of this plane of suffering and sorrow and all of that stuff.

Ever since I've been involved in this I have been a record keeper of one kind or another. I can remember in the earliest phases of my first professional work which I started in basically late 1989, early 1990, I began to do readings. My base, which has been my base for a quarter of century now, was Ibiza. As people began to hear about what I was doing, slowly but surely I collected a tremendous amount of data from the people that were in the subculture that I was a part of on the island. It was an interesting isolated group to look at. My general description of them was simply black sheep. They tended to be escape artists, they tended to have left behind whatever their native culture was and gone through various roads and pathways ending up on the island.

What was so fascinating about it because I already had enough data to be able to see sort of roughly what percentages were like in terms of profile and things like that, that amongst the crew that I knew about 40% of them were 3/5's, which is totally disproportionate. It should be around 14%. And of course, it's where I first began my interest in them, to understand the commonality in the process for these beings. They were all forced, in a sense, to move away from their roots because of things that had happened and the things that people knew about them and things that people said about them and things they couldn't escape and on and on.

So it's not necessarily an easy role. Obviously, if one is not operating according to Strategy and Authority you're really going to make mistakes; real mistakes, mistakes that cost you, mistakes that cost others. It can really cost you.

Motivation

So, let's begin to take our look and obviously the first thing is that we can see, because we've been looking at this. We know this progression that is going to take place here. And obviously as we're moving through these progressions we're also going to see that there is going to be those particular resonances that are going to be there that are going to prove to be rather interesting.

I want you, though, to begin to get the idea that—what are we looking at? When we're looking at personality color we are looking at motivation, after all. We are looking at the intended motivation. We know very much that the 1st color motivation is a fear motivation which is an intelligence gathering motivation—the need, the drive to be able to get the information you need.

Now, think about this just logically for a moment. If you're somebody that bangs into things and is determined and pointed and you happen to have this kind of motivation what you really know is that these are not beings that are going to let go just because something doesn't work right away. You know something about the personality. In other words, the moment they try to work their way through, let's say it's a mathematical problem and they just can't get it, they're not going to quit. Not right away. They're not going to quit because they have a drive underneath that is pointing them mentally to digging into it.

Again, that will be quite different than the drive that is going to be there if the drive is coming from the 2nd color. And the guru is not interested in that. It's not interested in this digging deep. So you end up with a very different kind of martyr, you end up with a very different kind of 3. You end up with a very different way in which you confront imperfection.

Think about the progression. When you start off with the 1, the 1 says there must be a solid foundation. In other words, it is the search for the absolute. The 3 says it may all, in fact, be bullshit. This is the magic of the 3. The 3 takes nothing for granted; it can't take anything for granted. And of course, what happens in the end is that their experiential process becomes something that is deeply influential because they have really been there and you know that they're going to work their way through it.

And you see, what they're looking for is the flaw, the loophole, the error, the glitch. This is the dilemma for the 3's. They're always attracted to this harmony, the 6, this promise of paradise. The 3 really deals with the real world, and it sees that the real world is flawed. And because it's trained not to see the world that way, it sees itself that way; it's flawed. Wow, can they suffer—martyr, martyr, martyr.

The Teacher Teacher

All right, let's take a look at this combination. If we start just with the first one, just to have some entertainment here, we've got the martyr teacher personality. All we know about that, because we're not seeing this within the gate within the design, are they Manifestor, are they a Generator, are they split, are they this, are they that. And when we're dealing with the mind we have to know what their not-self is like, we have to understand their openness in order to understand how they can express the outer authority that is here in them to express, this 3rd line mind, this trial and error mind.

And this trial and error mind that is driven to get to the bottom of things, ever digging deeper. Now of course, it has a 5th line body. And this 5th line body, by the way, is going to be very, very sensitive to acoustics. It's something that we know from its PHS. Obviously, we have a resonance that is here in the teacher teacher. In other words, we have the resonance of the 1-1 color. So what we know about that is if this body is operating according to Strategy and Authority, the splenic system and the way it operates through the brain is going to be in resonance with the potential of this brain, this mind, to be able to dig into that resource.

In other words, this is a pure situation in which the body creates an investigating infrastructure, a neural network that is geared towards investigation. And the personality has the opportunity, because it is that 1st color, to directly take advantage of that; in other words, a very, very honed and very specific orientation.

It says something about this 3/5 in the way in which they're going to be very, very absorbed in things until they really get right down to the bottom of it, and their body is what's bringing them to that. In other words, the body, the heretical teacher is actually going to end up with the possibility of investigating or leading the vehicle to a place where the investigation can be in an area where it can be quite different than what the personality may have expected on its trial and error road of suddenly discovering something that it didn't even know was there, but the body, its brain, was already in place.

It's fun to begin to play because if you can't play with this, you can never really just let go and play out the poetry. It's always a key in Design, reading keynotes and playing with them and thinking about the underlying themes in the keynotes and seeing how they come together. And obviously, we see that we have this spiral movement where like in the line level we have this shifting that's taking place in the design color, so we go from this 1st chain, which is a 3-1, 5-1, we shift to a 3-1, 5-2. And again, we'll go to that 3-2, 5-2. In other words, the personality is going to shift and we end up with this wonderful spiral as we move all the way through.

The Teacher Guru

So here we have this shift in which we have the same personality, in other words, again we have this mind that is bent on discovery. It isn't a mind that is easily discouraged. It's got that fear drive underneath. "What if I just missed something? If I just missed something then I've lost everything, all this work. It must be there." There is this kind of mind that will not let go until it's absolutely certain that it's folly.

Remember, we need the 3's to be the life editors—what works, what doesn't work. But we have a shift. And of course, the shift in the body is an interesting shift. That is, you're moving away from the nose, in that sense, the teacher heretic, you're moving to the mouth, you're moving to the taste system. And of course again, in that you have a much more specific kind of brain orientation. In other words, this is not about a brain that is driven to investigate. As a matter of fact, there will be nothing to investigate. There will simply be either some kind of natural potential that is going to be expressed ultimately through their holistic design.

It's the whole thing about understanding the 2. What we do know about the 2, what we know about the 5 vehicle is that the 5 vehicle or what the 2nd tone carries into the 5 vehicle, this 2nd tone, there is always this potential to have a weakness. This is the whole thing about the barriers that exist in the genetic continuity from the 2nd line to the 2nd color to the 2nd tone. So, here when you're dealing with this 2nd color, this color of hope that basically to understand that this color of hope is about relying on an intelligence that has a sense for something that nobody else has a sense for.

Within this context of this personality, this is somebody that sees something wrong in something that nobody else sees is wrong, because they can't see it yet because it isn't the time for them to see it yet. It took a long time to put Newton in his place, so to speak. It's all relative. So this is a very different kind of brain system. It tunes into something different.

It's not the investigating brain at all. It is this very, very protected and at the same time searching brain. And of course it does its searching in terms of the way in which it takes in its prana, searching through breathing. And of course, there is a real difference in the way in which these two beings are going to be perceived in the society or the world around them. And of course, they're very similar. And if you took that similarity to the absolute extreme—same day, same time, same city, a slight difference so you have this shift—you would see that these are very different beings in the way in which they operate, in the way in which they're perceived.

The teacher teacher is definitely going to be able to get into that one thing and dig it all out and be able to make its discovery. It will. And when it does so, by the way, as outer authority it's going to be well received. But these are the ones that were shouting at the beginning of the Industrial Revolution that heating up the planet was going to cause problems. I don't know if anybody said that then, but I assume somebody did. Nobody was paying attention, anyway.

This kind of brain system has a sensitivity to those things that are not yet part of the common recognition. So you end up with a very different kind of martyr. Here you end up with an example of what could be the righteous martyr that keeps on saying, look it's going to happen, it's going to happen and nobody believes them. They become ridiculed. Because they are not a teacher in the physical sense, the brain sense, they have no way of being able to explain exactly how that works. This is the dilemma of the 2, the risk of the paper tiger, the inability to be able to substantiate whatever the knowing, sensing, understanding may be.

The Guru Guru

This is different. And it's different because the motivation is not ultimately to drive you to teach the other, which of course the martyr teacher has to deal with, which is why in those variations they're received very differently. This is really different. Here you have the alignment of the two 2nd colors. In other words, you have a brain system that is oriented towards its unique sensitivity and you have a mind that is ready to work with it.

So, this is a 3 that their ultimate ability is to be able to discover the flaw in the other. It's what the guru is good for. Everything about a guru is understanding that it's all part of understanding the 2 and 2-isms, it's about understanding barriers, it is about understanding that the guru is there to find your weakest point to shatter your barrier. It is simply a reflection of what they are. That is, it is the expression of 2-ness.

And of course, for themselves their expression of their life is waiting for that specific call, whatever it is, that fire that sets them off. And again, in order for any of these martyrs to be able to fulfill the potential that is there, they all need to be able to operate correctly in relationship to the design because this is the life. And this is what is going to set the platform for that life.

The Guru Priest

The key in this shift to the priest is that the priest is a manipulator. That is, it is one of the inherent themes in the 3 to be able to change things, to be able to effect things. This is what this trial and error process is all about, change the way you do things. If there is no change there is no growth. If there is no growth there is no profit, because in the end there is always this material value that is there.

It is also about the organizing of others. After all, the 3's are our pathfinders, because they're the ones who are going to be the best testers of anything. Because if anything is going to go wrong they're going to see it, discover it, and feel it. They may die from it. But then again, that is part of their service. They're the ones that, in that sense, are really able to express the essence of the 3 and the essence of the 3 can be embodied in this metaphor or keynote of priest.

The main line of any priesthood is to tell you what not to do, what will protect you from going astray, not being embraced by whatever your gods may be. It is the 3 that says the way is not that way; that way is the way of sin, whatever; that way is the way of the heathen, of this, of the that, don't go that way, don't do this, don't do that. Thou shalt not, thou shalt not, thou shalt not, thou shalt not—this is a 3 theme, it's correct within the context of understanding what a 3 is. The 3 is here to say, don't do that. I found out. It's no good, it hurts, and it's terrible. It's awful.

Remember, you cannot think about the 3 without understanding that this is the grounding, the lock to the material plane. The illusion, obviously, but still this is the lock to the material plane, to growth on the material plane and development on the material plane. If you look deep within the continuity of 3-ness, what you get to see is this is a very special place. The 3rd color is the color of desire. To be locked into this need to get through, to make it on this plane, to drive through no matter what.

The 3rd Color: Hot or Cold

So, of course, if you have a priest brain—and again these are hot or colds; the 3rd color in terms of its dietary regimen is either going to be hot or cold. And of course, this tells you a lot, in a sense, and of course that knowledge would come from the tonal level, the complete chain. It would tell you, for example, whether this is going to be a kind of steamy heretic or whether this is going to be a cool cat, or whether this is going to be the kind of heretic that steams everybody up and gets stoned in a hurry, or it's going to be the kind of heretic that cools everybody out. It's very interesting to think about it.

Number Continuity

This generation of Design students has access to all these various levels that we work with. One of the most important things to do is to begin to work with number continuity, to be able to understand the continuity in oneness, what it means, this shifting from what the cognition is in oneness to how it's transmitted as information, which is the color, and how it's received in the line. And the way in which there is this progression of thematics that are there.

The deeper you go into a comparative appreciation of this continuity, the richer your own ability to be able to look at chains and to begin to understand them and begin to understand the shift or the nuances that are there. One of the things we have to see here is that we have to look at the basic shifting that takes place. At this point it is important that we just set this aside for a moment and we just look at this.

What we know is that we've got two processes that are here. We have a resonance process; and that resonance process is the resonances of the color, so the two 1-1's or if you skip a step the combined 2-2's, if you skip a step again, the 3-3's. So, it's something to keep in mind that we begin by the way with the resonance and every single one of these ends with that. In other words, it builds through in this mechanism, and then of course you have the changing system that's inside.

Obviously, there is really a difference. You can begin to grasp that if your brain system is in line with your mental motivation that there is a streamlining and advantage here. And it's true. But the advantage is also a limitation. In other words, you get locked in. It's a specific lock and you're not open to any other possibility or any other different way. For example, the way in which the martyr heretic that is teacher teacher, the way in which they approach life, the way in which they look at things cannot really speak for the whole process.

There is something else. There is something that doesn't come from investigation, that there's something else that comes out of nowhere. And that coming out of nowhere has just as much value, even if it's harder to get across, than the thing that can be discovered and stretched and pulled and looked at and explained and so forth and so on.

These are bridges and in essence they are like the transitional profiles themselves, they are mini versions of this, mini versions creating what is this movement as you go through this process, as you wind your way all the way through.

The Prophet Prophet

Let's take a look at a prophet prophet. The 4th color is need. And of course, we know very little about this because most 4th color beings are operating in transference, they operate out of the 1. That means that their life is guided by fears that have no intelligent root to them. And of course you can imagine what that can lead to.

But need is something that can be really extraordinary. That is, everything about the 4 is about its influence. No matter where you look at the 4, like the 3 because they are this transition point, they both carry very, very powerful qualities. The 4 itself as a color is something that so easily moves into transference. And in essence the transference is part of its capacity to be able to recognize precisely what is necessary. This is very special. This is a very special martyr heretic. It's a martyr heretic that literally can discover what is really necessary. Also, in that sense, as a byproduct of that journey, discover all those things that are not necessary.

Anytime that you're looking at a 4 you have to see that if they don't operate correctly they are easily victims, easily have rundown immune systems. They can suffer from fatigue and exhaustion and all of these things that we see in 4th lines in the way in which 4th lines are expressed. But also in the 4th line as you look at its general keynote, this keynote of externalization that you can see that what is necessary is the only thing that is supposed to be externalized. That's really what it's all about. It's understanding that it is the cognition expressed through the color that is providing the information that needs to be externalized.

And what it's there to provide is what is necessary. So, here you have a very different kind of approach. This is a way in which the brain system itself—again, whenever you're looking at the design side, we are looking at the body, we are looking at the way in which the brain system functions. It's a brain system that is, for example, is circumstantial. That is, it needs calm. That calm is going to be one of the things that is going to help develop the sensory capacity of touch, a sensory capacity that is there in that being in order to be able to recognize what is necessary.

And of course, because the mind is rooted in that 4th color motivation, the mind is designed for that. It is ready and prepared for it. The sad thing is that obviously humanity is in transference. You don't get to see it. Even in these beings where essentially you look at the resonance and you see that the whole potential is there. Yet, the fact is they're not living that out because they are going to be in that transference and they are going to be without that cognition. The cognition is expressed in this theme of the prophet or expressed in the theme of the color, which ever way you look at the color whether from the design side or whether you look at it from the personality side.

The Prophet Messenger

Again, when you look at the shifts where you have this, it's very different. First of all you have another kind of resonance, because of course you have the 5-5, that is, the design 5-5, so you have a heretical body that has a lot of paranoia that is built into the physical system. It is highly alert. You have a 5th color which means it's very sensitive to acoustics. It is a brain system that is very much going to be oriented towards the delivery of information. It's going to be a brain that focuses on organizing information for outward expression. And whether that expression is going to be verbal, physical, creative, whatever the case may be, that's where the physical system is pointed at.

Of course, what you have on the other end is that you have a personality that is not in resonance with this, you have a dissonance in these shifts that are taking place even though it's a progression. What is necessary is no longer something that has a natural feel to it. It's not coming from the brain set up that would naturally support this. It's coming from something else entirely.

It's one of the reasons why it's one of the most difficult things to do is release yourself from controlling your life and constantly having your mind be absorbed in the mundane and banal of the decision making in your process, because you can never really free your vehicle to express what is its fundamental potential for you. And then allow yourself to experience what it means for you to be correctly motivated. That is, for your outer authority to operate correctly.

But then again, we do need all kinds of influences. It is the gift, after all, of this martyr when they discover all of those things not worth externalizing, not worth influencing others. When they come upon that thing that is worthy of influence then the messenger system in them is something that both is going to put them in situations where they could influence a lot of people and their personality will be very restrictive and be very uncomfortable with anything other than what's familiar.

And of course, it's simply going to be a variation on a theme. It will sort of look like a kind of reluctant messenger that only wants to tell certain people what it has to know. But again, this is not a 5 personality, it's a 4 personality and the 4 personality as a color theme is naturally only going to be comfortable influencing others.

3rd Line Beings and Dishonesty

Again, you have to see that all of this is about failure. All of this is about being able to be of value both in terms of what you gain and in terms of what others gain from your experience and honesty. And it's the honesty that's the difficult part. Most 3rd line beings develop a natural dishonesty—I don't want to make that sound terrible. But there is this kind of not really letting people know the flaws that they see, the mistakes that they see, the errors that they see, what they experience themselves, the things that go wrong. They're taught at a very young age that all that's bad, that they're not supposed to make mistakes and all that stuff.

So, there is a lot of not telling the truth. And of course, if you don't tell the truth, the truth has a hard time existing. It's one of the most important things. It was one of the things that I've always enjoyed about having 3's in my life because nobody tests Human Design better than a 3. Not because they're more intelligent or this or that, but it is inherent within them to find flaws. This is what they're for.

And it's only when they get to that point that they can understand that here in this configuration of the martyr heretic, the flaw that you discover becomes the universal principle. This has enormous potential, potential literally to change the world. This is what can sit there as a possibility.

And as you go through these various themes, again it's not about trying to figure out how you construct it for yourself, it's just about witnessing it. We are a witness consciousness, a passenger consciousness. It is what we're here for. And you see you can witness this. In other words, you can experience it and watch it. You can watch your vehicle begin to live out the clarity of its role, its distinct quality. You can watch your mind and the way in which it plays within its frame.

Mind is Built on its Openness

Now, the mind is more difficult. It's more difficult because the martyr teacher can only be expressed, or whatever, the martyr Buddha can only be expressed through what is the not-self of the being. This is how mind is constructed. Your mind is constructed on your openness. It's something to deeply understand. When you're looking at your mind it's built on all the openness you have, the so-called not-self strategies, and this builds the way in which, frames the way, creates the structure for the way in which your mind is going to work for the rest of your life. Absolutely nothing is going to change that. That is, you are, we are hardwired. We are wired with potential for differentiation. And that means that what is not wired is permanently not wired. It is the openness. And it is this openness that frames the way in which the mind operates.

For example, if you're somebody who has an undefined ego, undefined heart center, when you're operating correctly, when you are mentally a passenger and you are a 3/5 teacher teacher martyr heretic, the way in which you are going to express that information is through the wisdom of the ego. In other words, what you're going to be able to see is that you're going to be able to see the false promises. You're going to be able to see if there is a true promise because you will test every promise that you have ever heard and you will test it in enormous detail because you happen to have an open ego and that has framed the way in which your not-self mind operates.

It's something very important to grasp. It's not just about seeing the personality as ok, here are the keys, here's the profile. But again, we're talking about mind. And in order to understand mind you have to understand mind is built on its openness. And so in order to really look at yourself within this context, understand that whatever it is that you're going to live out as a role is going to be expressed through the uniqueness that you bring to that role, because we all do.

I have an open sacral and an open root and an open solar plexus and an open head. So the only way I am ever going to express my personality role is through those themes. This is where my potential wisdom is, to understand through the openness of the sacral, to understand the nature of life, the nature of being. And through the solar plexus center, to understand the experiential process of what it is to actually be in the world. And to understand pressure, to understand the pressure from above and the pressure from below, to see how it moves us, controls us, frames us.

I express what appears to be my wisdom for you, my outer authority is coming through my open centers, the same open centers, by the way, that were the enemy when I did not know. It's always easier when you're dealing with the body because when you're dealing with the body everything is really straightforward. You follow your inner authority and your body just snaps together into shape, period.

But the mind does not. This is the great challenge. So while your vehicle is operating correctly and putting you in all of those particular situations where you have a particular advantage of your particular brain system and your particular sensory uniqueness, it doesn't mean that your mind gets it and it doesn't mean that you get to live out what is your role. You don't.

If you're operating correctly according to your Strategy and Authority your vehicle is going to do every thing that it has to do, and it's going to do everything that is correct—it'll put you in the right place, it'll give you the right sensory information. But if a personality is in transference it has no access to it. And even though the personality isn't making decisions, it can't make sense out of what's going on. It just can't. Because it is not tapped into what is its particular cognition.

To Understand Mind, Understand Your Not-Self

So, to begin to understand mind you have to understand your not-self. You have to begin to recognize what is not you. And begin to see that this is what you're here to learn, it is what you're here to investigate. And it is through this realm that you're here to investigate that your role is going to flower, because it's precisely what it's for.

The personality role is an outer authority role. It's a role that says, look I have learned something for you. Every single martyr, this is really their motto—look I have learned something for you—because this is what they're actually doing. This is what they're all about. And of course, the thing is that they are here to learn what others are not capable of learning because they're not capable of surviving the hard knocks in all of that.

The 3/6: Buddha Teacher

I think we look at all of these transitional aspects. This is a transition within a transition. It's a 3/6 transitional profile, but it is not Buddha Buddha, it is Buddha teacher. In other words, it is a double transition. So, in essence, these double transitions are fascinating. It is a very unusual configuration and at the same time because of the commonality of the 6-1 it is a continuity that is there in all transitional profiles.

These transition places where information moves, this is a place that demands the deepest respect and attention to correctness. The role model is not here to be caught in the observer/observed. It's here, in essence, to be not invisible, but perhaps inscrutable or intangible somehow. It is just a filtering zone. It is a place to move information. It is a place where the whole development of the totality operates in these layers and layers and layers with these spirals with these particular transition points.

And of course, here we're dealing with a 3/6. The moment that we are dealing with a 6 in a profile we have enormous amount of instability that is going to be there—the tripartite life process, the chaos of the beginning, and the concerns of the end. I think what's most important to keep in mind is the attention we need to pay to anyone who carries transitional aspects, whether they have a transitional profile or whether they have a transitional scheme in their role.

I think it's something to keep in mind that correctness for them is very significant. Not simply in the obvious of what it means for their life, but in fact how it will automatically change the life of people around them, because these are bridging beings. And whether they recognize it or not, they're constantly providing this bridging to move from one thing to another and the more correct they are the cleaner the way in which information moves and impacts the forces that are around them.

LECTURE FOUR

The Martyr Roles

It all goes back to being correct, it goes back to honoring your inner authority. This is the magic in the story, and then to begin to experience your unique variation of these things. There are so many variations of each of these because they're going to be expressed through the openness, they're going to be expressed in the way in which that mind has been conditioned to work. This is the thing that is so fascinating.

Lecture Five

The Opportunist Roles

All right and away we go with our 4's. It's my 4 week, and I'm dealing with 4's wherever I look this week. One of the things that I enjoy about this process of teaching many different things during the course of a week is that in many cases themes align themselves. I'm looking at 4's, as an example, nodally through color in PHS and Rave Psychology. So it's very interesting as I come to this place this week now to get to another level of this theme.

It's one of the things that I have been talking about, and that is beginning to master the understanding of the genetic continuity that exist in the numbers themselves. The relationship between the 4 as a line, as a color, as a tone, what we're looking at are variations, or octaves of frequencies in which there are commonalities that bind them together in terms of where they are within that particular frequency unit.

The 4th Line: Opportunist

Here we're looking at the 4th line role, the opportunist. I think it is one of the most complex of roles in the sense that when we look at the upper trigram, the thing that distinguishes the upper trigram from the lower trigram is its transpersonal focus. If you have a 4th or 5th or 6th line that is sitting in a gate somewhere it is not very adept at its own function because it spends so much time being attracted to what it's not. That is, the other side of the channel.

Everything about the 4 is that the 4 lays the foundation for our transpersonal relationships. After all, when you get to the 5 you get to the stranger and universality. And when you get to the 6 you get to selfishness and a kind of perfected aloofness within a larger grouping. In essence, the only truly transpersonal social quality that you can find in a line is the 4th line.

So, it is deeply significant in terms of anyone carrying 4th line themes, their life is always going to be focused on a social dynamic and it is only through that social dynamic that they are in fact going to be able to fulfill whatever purpose they may have. The thing to recognize about a role is that it is through your role that you accomplish what is your potential. The role sets the frame. So the moment that we're looking at this opportunistic role we have a frame that says that what I am going to be is going to be dependent on who I relate to, who I am connected to. It is out of those beings that all of the opportunities in my life are going to come.

RAVE COSMOLOGY VI: Profile, Purpose and Function

A Digital Book for Students

And this leads us to a fundamental dilemma. And it is the dilemma that particularly in this case as we see it, that is, we're looking at 4/6's and we're looking at juxtaposition in the 4/1. In the majority of cases, in the case of looking at the 4/6 and understanding that we are looking at a 4/6 profile so we're looking at a tripartite life process divided by the Saturn return and the Kiron return in three parts. And understanding that in terms of the way in which the first part of the life is going to be lived out, the first Saturn cycle, that basically the dilemma for a 4/6 is the mistakes that they will make in terms of who to relate to.

That is, the thematic of not being a 4/6, but being a 4/"3." They're not really 3's obviously, but they live out a 3 dynamic. Of course, that is the trial and error, make-your-mistakes process. And of course, for the 4 this can be absolutely devastating. And this is the greatest dilemma that is there when you're looking at the 4th line. The 4th line suffers so much from the lack of the ability to be able to cognitively discern who to invest in, because it's investment. The most fundamental thing for any 4 to understand is that they invest in other beings in the hope, in a sense, that there is going to be some kind of return.

And it's not a one-way street. That is, the investment of their friendship and their influence and whatever it is that they are capable of externalizing has its value to the other in the social dynamic that it comes with. But in return they're looking for something. They're not necessarily looking for something directly from that person. But that person may be the key to a job, to meeting a potential lover, whatever the case may be. In other words, those we invest in bring us our returns.

Anybody who has ever contemplated playing the stock market knows that being smart enough to know what to invest in when nobody else sees it, is what makes a few people very, very rich. It's a gift. And of course, this fundamental gift is inherent in everyone who carries the 4th line. They all have a cognitive root that they can get to if they are not in transference.

But it's something again to really understand about what it means to succeed as an opportunist. To succeed as an opportunist you have to know who to befriend. And it can't be a not-self mind that's deciding, because the not-self mind will not have the resources to be able to tell which person is worthy of that investment. Sometimes you have to invest your attention in people for a long time before that opportunity is going to arise. Most 4's are forever being drained by maintaining relationships that are non-functional. And they are relationships that will never bring opportunity because they were never the right relationships in the first place.

Again, the only way that you're going to get there is through the correctness. There is no other way. But it's really something to understand about the 4, and particularly within this context, because these early relationships, remember it takes you until you're about 29 or 30 years old, it means that phase of your life can include the person that you're going to marry, the career that you're going to do, all kinds of things. And that career is in its relationship to the social dynamic of the colleagues, the people you work for, all of that is going to be distorted if one does not have the ability to be able to recognize what people are worthy of being befriended. Of course, this depends on its cognition.

The Teacher Teacher

So let's take a little journey here. We're getting used to the pattern now in seeing this movement and seeing the spiral as it moves. Again, let's begin with the 1st color and the 1st color personality. Obviously here we have color resonance. That is, the 1st color personality and 1st color design. When we're looking at this whole theme of the teacher we know that there is this motivation to be able to express outer authority and have that outer authority be an authority for others. After all, it carries its resonance to the 1st line themes of basic authoritarianism, to be the foundation, to be solid.

In that sense, the teacher is about the expression of that authority of recognition of solidness. If you have a teacher that seems unsure of what they're saying, you're not going to be very comfortable for very long with them as a teacher. And yet, this teacher opportunist, in order to be a teacher first you must learn, and you must learn much more than you're going to teach. This is the basic thing.

And of course, everything about this opportunist is that this is an opportunist that needs to investigate the other before they make a decision. Think about the classic sexual description of the 4. The classic sexual description is the 4/6 in high school and they have best friends of the opposite sex who they would really like to have as a boyfriend or a girlfriend in the sense of them being not so much a lover but a romantic connection, and instead they end up with them as a friendship and they have to go through the ordeal of listening to their friends talk about their desires, their romances, whatever the case may be.

It is often deeply uncomfortable for the 4's to deal with this brotherhood/sisterhood aura that they give off. But it also means that, at least sexually for them, before anything can happen friendship has to be established. Again, this is one of the things to recognize about the quality of this teacher that until the proper level of learning has been established that the teaching isn't going to be something that is going to be effective.

The other thing is what is to be learned is going to be dependent on the investment in the others. Think about the things you learn when—let's look at just the first phase here in terms of being a 4/6 profile—one of the things you basically learn, most of the things you learn as a teenager you tend to learn from your friends, you tend to learn from a kind of uncensored, un-propagandized zone. It's not that you ignore the other stuff, but there's a tremendous amount of life information that you learn from your friends. Most teenagers learn about sex that way, they learn about the nature of the world that way. This is something where who you associate with begins to frame the way in which you're going to handle the world that you're maturing into.

So obviously, if you don't have the right associations, if you don't have the right friends, you've got a problem. Instead of learning about this and that, you can end up learning about things that end up putting you in a lot of trouble. You can end up with opportunities that look like opportunities that aren't opportunities. You can end up learning lessons the hard way about investing in the wrong people and finding out how quickly they can get you into trouble. It's very common.

So whenever you're seeing this 1st color as a profile process you have to see that this is something that needs to be earned. And yet, at the same time you have to see it within the context of the line because the line obviously is going to frame it, this is something that has to be earned through those relationships and the correct relationship will take them to the correct knowledge, will take them to the place where they can develop their foundation, their solidity and begin their process of being able to externalize it.

Underneath, of course, is the vehicle itself and of course it's the vehicle's life. And here we have in the resonance of the teacher we have a brain system that is going to be oriented towards investigation. In other words, as I pointed out to you last week and one of the things we need to consider is that there are specific relationships that obviously have what we can call resonant roles, and these resonances are resonances that are running through the color in terms of alternating. Obviously, we get teacher teacher, we get guru guru, and this is saying something very special.

That is, I have to be careful here because I don't want to—there is a tendency in human beings to measure and the measurement always means one thing is better than the other and if you don't have the thing that's better then you have the thing that's worse and you get all that stuff. For those of you that have any kind of astrological background it's sort of like a trine. A trine in astrology is a triangle basically that is formed by three aspects, three planets, as an example.

The theme is that it sort of makes the energy flow easily. If you look at these combinations that are here, that is, these resonance combinations you can see that in essence things should flow easily. In other words, if we look at the role model with its teacher we know that we have a brain system that is being oriented towards the potential of the kind of brain that is good at doing research, good at holding the information together, good at focusing it and getting it out. And all it will take is a personality to be able to take advantage of it. Because, again, that is the way it works. The personality is limited by what the brain gives it. If you have a frontal lobotomy it doesn't matter what your personality potentially could do, it could be Einstein in drag, and it wouldn't do any good, because there is no mechanism to function out of.

So it's something to understand that if you have physical system oriented towards a determination, to have a brain system that is something that will do the research, do the work, then having a personality that is in resonance is an advantage. No question. It doesn't mean, however, that the opposite is true for the guru teacher.

The 6th Line: Role Model

Before I do that let's look at our role model for a moment, this theme of the 6th line. I think that the real revelation about the nature of the 6th line came to me very, very early in my process when within the first year after my experience I was cataloging things. One of the things that I was cataloging was the information I had been given about the coming mutation in 2027. The mutative key being the 55th gate and the codon histidine and all this stuff, and that the mutation was taking place in the 6th line of the 55 and that we were moving into a 6th line theme when the cycle changes from the Cross of Planning to the Sleeping Phoenix in 2027.

It hung there for me, this 6-ness that this is something that is very unusual. When you see the previous mutation it took place in the 4th lines. That is, the mutation that took place in the larynx about 85 to 90,000 years ago, the so-called dropped larynx mutation. It took place in the 12.4, actually the 12.4/11.4 combination. The dropping of the larynx enabled us to develop our communicative capacity, and like the 4 itself it opened up the doorway to the expanded social potential of humanity so we get to the point that you have a city like Shanghai with its 30 million people and they don't all eat each other, which is quite remarkable anyway.

Then I had the extraordinary experience of having the original Rave I'Ching come out of me in November of 1989. I paid very little attention to what seemed to be some kind of automatic writing because I certainly did not know the I'Ching at that time, I did not understand it. I had never even seen an English translation of it. So, how the lines were written remains a certain mystery for me.

But I do remember paying particular attention to a few of them as they were coming out. One of them in particular was the 55.6. I can remember writing the keynote. I don't know how to describe such feelings in moments like that. For me there are moments—I'm so individual—of deep knowing in which I know something without it yet being concretized. It's almost like catching that moment of mutation on the pulse. You get the whole thing. And then you sort have to assimilate it. I guess that's the magic of the 3rd gate, this bringing order to the mutative pulse.

But that keynote—selfishness—is something that needs to be grasped about the 6 because we see it as a transpersonal phenomena. It is upper trigram in that sense. And it is transpersonal but not out of itself. It is transpersonal in terms of the way in which it attracts the social dimension to it. It's very different than the 4 that seeks it. The ideal of the 6 is that it is absorbed at a new level in self, in just simply existing.

So, one of the things to be clear about in terms of what you're looking at when you're looking at a role model, because I think it is—we have themes like leader and trust and all of these things. But everything about the success of the role model is how well self-contained they are. The ideal for any role model is the personal authority that is the gift of this knowledge. I am a 5 handing over the lantern to 6's. That is, the heretic that plays the role of cajoling and beating the sheep into line, desperately trying to turn them into wolves, and turning that over to the 6's that say we stand by ourselves, and those who can't stand by themselves, well, sorry.

We're moving into a different age. There is an inherent selfishness that needs to be recognized in the role model, and the selfishness that does not carry the pejorative value of that. In other words, not selfishness as a bad thing to say about somebody, but if you cannot be absorbed in yourself, in your process, if you cannot be in love with yourself, you cannot be fully self-contained. The thing about the role model is that the ideal is that there is need for nothing, but openness to anything, or readiness is a better word, readiness for anything. So, the opportunistic role model comes out of a being who out of the very, very specific way in which they fulfill themselves comes the influence that they can have to impact the other; again, within the context of the tuning of this role to the color theme.

Differentiation between the Design Side and the Personality Side

Now, when we move—back to my original point—to what are the shifts that take place in the spiral where we have the differentiation between the design side and the personality side that obviously we have a very, very different kind of process at work. Inga earlier mentioned that her sister is having twins. Here is one of these classic examples of how a shift in nuance—most twins—it depends, you can have up to—I've done twins that are 17 minutes, 25 minutes, 38 minutes apart, things like that. There are many that come very close together.

But take the example of those that may be 10, 12 minutes apart where color is definitely something that can step in. Here is a classic example of the shift that is hard to see, because on the surface, if you don't see the color, you've got a basic dynamic, you're dealing with a 4/6, we have our basic formula for describing the 4/6: the opportunistic role model, and what it has to go through and so forth and so on, but this nuance underneath means that they have a different kind of brain system. They're different.

Not only are they different in terms of the way in which their brain system operates, they're different in terms of the diet that they need. It's one of the most interesting things in the shift between the 1st color design role model and the 2nd color design role model. They're very different people. They both have basically primitive diets, but diets that are very different from each other. And you can see what a teacher is—one thing at a time. How else to build a foundation? One thing at a time.

And there you have the guru diet and the guru diet is I'm going to have the ideal menu. I'm going to be able to discern precisely those things that are for me. And of course, in return, precisely those things that are for you. This is a different kind of mind. When I say it is a different kind of mind, that is, both minds are teacher minds from the personality perspective. But they're going to operate differently, because they're based on a different source.

Make no mistake that I am the messenger of the Mother and of the form principle. It is so obvious to me, it's 20 years obvious to me that everything about the way in which personality consciousness operates is first and foremost determined by what it is given as a possibility, not what it demands, not what it earns, not what it wants, but what it gets from the form. My concern about people entering into their Strategy and Authority, people who experiment with their PHS is that in doing so, what you are really doing is you're opening up the real possibility for mind. This is where it is. It isn't about how well you train your personality.

Difference between the Teacher Brain and the Guru Brain

In Rave Psychology I teach very clearly that the personality needs to be educated. That's another story entirely. The vehicle waits to be set free. And it is the vehicle that establishes the parameters. When you're looking at these roles, and when you're looking at these two opportunistic teachers you have to see very clearly the way in which their minds ultimately are going to operate are going to be different, not so much in that they're not going to need to learn and want to express. But they're going to need to learn and want to express within the guidelines given. The teacher brain is a brain that is oriented towards digging into things. The guru brain is not, it doesn't want to dig into anything. The guru brain just has its natural ability to discern. That's what it's good at. It can have a taste for things. This is a very different foundation as a brain for that teacher opportunist to work with.

And the way they're going to impact the other is different. And they're not going to be one of these teachers that really seem to know their stuff. They're not. In a sense, it's going to take a leap of faith to accept their teaching. It doesn't mean their teaching is wrong. It doesn't mean that at all. It may be deeply profound. But it doesn't come with that certainty that is carried in the teacher teacher authoritarian resonance. "This is the way it is, this is the way it works." It's very different.

As we wander along in our journey of looking at these roles, this is the movie. This is what sets the stage, this is the performance possibility and only the performance possibility, and this (personality) can never dominate. It can never be the personality that determines the way the brain works. Never. It's a one-way street. The design came first long before the personality came to the vehicle, the design was there, it set the frame, it set the game, it set the brain. It put it all in motion.

Personality is a Way in Which the Design Gets Expressed

So, whenever you're looking at profile, this is something deep to grasp about profile. Most people when they're looking at profile they're stuck on the sun/earth personality—who they think they are. So they try to align themselves to the concept that is there in the interpretation of the cross relative to their personality. But it isn't, it's about their design. The personality is just a way in which the design gets expressed, which basically pisses off the personality, but what to do. You can't change the brain system.

The Guru Guru

So when we move then from this spiraling into the guru teacher then we get to the guru guru. Again, we have this resonance theme. Let's think about the impact of these forces. We know what the opportunistic teacher teacher role model is going to be like. It has the brain for the details, it loves to learn the details as a personality, everything is in synch and then it is going to give out those details as outer authority, that's going to be the way it's going to influence its brothers and sisters in the hood, so to speak. Wasn't that cute?

There is a shift then. We get the guru brain. And we know that the guru brain is very selective; it's very closed off by the way. It's a very narrow brain system. And at the same time it's very special because its very narrowness is there so it can be only open to something specific. This is always the theme that is inherent in the 2. And when we are looking at this, this is the ability to be able to suss something out, but not necessarily to really grasp it. It's what we understand in the 2nd line. That is, the paper tiger. The potential that it seems like the talent is there, but under pressure it may not be there at all, it may fall apart.

So we have a teacher personality consciousness that really wants to dig into things, but there is nothing to dig into. There is only the narrow whatever that has been provided by this brain system. And because this is a brain that does not like to dig into things, in fact likes to turn most things off, that this is going to be a teacher that is going to be limited in where it can influence or what it can influence and who will accept that, because it comes with the teacher authority, but it doesn't come with the teacher backing.

Now, obviously as I said, it can be very insightful. But when we get to the guru guru we have a complete shift. We are no longer involved in these 1st line color themes, the teacher teacher. So we enter into the beginning of the 2-2 binary, the resonance binary, and again we have the resonance of it. You have a brain that is restrictive in terms of what is going to be stimulating for it. It's going to have a taste for certain things. And you have a mind that's exactly the same way. And it means that if they're operating correctly that it is this ability in the design to align the vehicle to being in a geometry where they will meet the right people, where they will meet the right influences and where they in turn will be able to influence. But influence in a very different way, these are no longer teachers. This is the ability to see something in the other, and to gain the opportunity from that because everything about the opportunist personality, everything about being a 4/6 is about how important it is to have the right people in your life.

The Guru Priest

Again, we go through the shift. We go through this process. And obviously, when we get to the priest we are getting to the 3rd color on the design side, so we have a different kind of brain again. This is what we're looking at. It's a brain system. It's a hot/cold system; it's a brain system. It is one of the things to see very clearly that this can be very, very powerful in its way; it can be very rigid in its way.

Everything about the priest brain is its ability to find those things that heats things up or find those things that cools things down, in a sense. It can end up being very powerful in the sense that this is a guru that really knows how to control other people because there is so much control potential that is there. The thing to grasp is that as the brain shifts its focus, the personality adapts. This is why we have a struggle. This is why every human being, the human beings, for example, that have the great good fortune to be involved in this knowledge. It is still something that they have to deal with. The personality is at a disadvantage in the holistic process. It just is.

And yet, at the same time, because of the phase that we are in, in evolution, because of the dominance of the visual maia and the way in which the speed of light allows us to tune into experience in what appears to be an existential moment-by-moment phenomena, there is the illusion that mentally we are in fact in charge of the life process. This is what the not-self lives by.

And of course, we are not. It is all determined by the vehicle and our potential. One of the dilemmas of being not-self is that it's not simply that you lose this potential, you diminish its possibilities of ever being a potential. We have neural shutdown at three. It should not be the case; human beings. We're homogenized as babies. Every single one of these design colors is a dietary regimen, whether it is tonally fixed left or right, whatever the circumstance happens to be. This is a regimen. Without it there is homogenization, which means the potential that is there in the brain system is not something that can be realized.

Determination

The moment that you enter into Strategy and Authority, what you're doing is aligning your brain system to what your particular differentiation is about. It is why we call design color, determination. It is the thing that determines your differentiation. It is the thing that makes the difference. And of course, this determination is something that is obviously deeply enhanced by feeding your vehicle correctly. Everything about the PHS regimen is about making sure that the vehicle receives precisely the nutrition it needs, and not simply precisely the nutrition it needs, but precisely where that nutrition needs to go in order to be able to enhance the potential that is there in terms of the brain system.

The Brain System

Remember, I am speaking of brain system because in terms of PHS when you're looking at the sun/earth of the design you are looking at what is called PHS internal, which has to do with the brain system. When I speak of the brain system, obviously it is the brain system that runs the whole body. That is, it runs the whole vehicle, or manages it. So, the way in which you live out your life on the design side is not simply a matter that there is correctness in your movement, which obviously is going to change who is in your life, who you are going to meet, how you're going to handle experience. But at the same time it is changing the potential of the brain.

Now, that opens up the doorway to whatever the construct of the personality is, it gives the personality its possibility to be able to live out its potential, but within the construct and only within the construct. I am a 5/1. I am limited in terms of the ability to be a heretic by the very nature of my brain. That is just the way it is. If I had a dysfunctional brain I wouldn't exactly be a very good heretic, if you know what I mean. It's just something to grasp.

And when I say the brain system, ultimately I'm talking about what the mind can derive from its sensory system. And if that sensory system is all clogged up through transference, then it becomes exceedingly difficult for the opportunist in this case to be able to take advantage of their brain in order to be able to put out as outer authority their influence, because their influence is going to increase proportionally to the quality of their physical system, and the correctness of their physical system.

The Prophet Prophet

As we move along as we shift through we're going through these levels of brain system orientation, because that's what it's all about. And it's the thing to understand that obviously here we have a very interesting phenomena. And it's an interesting phenomena that you see at its clearest when you look at this variation. If you look at this combination you have three 4's in this mix. If you look at this combination you have the beginning of this interesting relationship, that is, the prophet to the opportunist.

What we know is that there is going to be a potential for a kind of resonance between the way in which this brain is going to be oriented. Again, this is a brain that is oriented to being influential, oriented towards being able to externalize. After all, this is where the determination can lead, that kind of brain. And on the other side the possibility to be able to express that within the limitation of the personality.

We're not really looking at the personality being changed underneath by the design; we are looking at the design offering the personality different possibilities for expression, because that's what it is, the two role model prophets, offering different possibilities for mental expression. The hardest part is not the design part, that's not the hard part. The hard part is the personality part, to accept what your body gives you, to accept what is your natural mental ability, to accept it. To accept it is not to look for it and not to work with it but to watch it and to experience it as it emerges.

We are so indulgent of our minds. The mind is deeply exalted. One of my black analogies is that mind is the gas of brain. And in terms of the not-self it stinks, quite frankly, but nonetheless that's the way it goes. I don't look at mind and see it as the be all and end all. I don't. I recognize how damaged it is and how distorted its operation is and how controlled it is by vast programming that takes place in so many levels on this plane.

What impresses me is the structure. It's the thing that's so fantastic. Software is really interesting, no question about it, but without the hardware, what is it? And the sophistication of the hardware changes the potential of the software. It's the hardware that's the story. Whenever you really need to get somebody to understand what Human Design is, the basis of decision making, you make decisions as yourself.

The decision has to be rooted in the hardware; this is where the life is. This is what it's all about. And it's something that needs to be deeply grasped. It isn't anywhere else. It's in the body.

The moment that the body operates correctly everything in terms of the potential of the being opens up as a possibility. It just does. And it's not like that you have to figure out how to do this or that with it, how to work with it. One of the things to understand about knowledge is that the moment you understand how something works all you need to do is watch it work, you don't need to make it work. It's the magic of informing the mind, educating the personality. It's what we're doing here.

Educating the Personality

Everything in Human Design ultimately is about the education of the personality. The first thing is to get the personality seduced enough that it will go along with trying to see what happens when it gives authority over to something else. And slowly the education of the personality in alignment with the transformation that takes place when you make such a change that you can begin to educate it and you can begin to get it to a place where it can stand back and no longer be directly involved.

Then you begin to understand what it means to have these kinds of roles, because you get to watch it, you hear it. You hear it on the inside in the way in which your inner dialogue operates, the way in which your mind works. You hear it on the outside when you express it. This is what we're about. This is one of the dilemmas that one has to come to in understanding this knowledge at a deep level, is to understand that we in fact lead two separate lives. We're a true duality, we're a true binary. This is the physical life (the red). That means that everything that you understand as your life is all here. And this is the mental level (the black). And this is your life and this is what you can give to others. And they're different. And they will always be different. This is the thing to grasp.

And when you're honoring your Strategy and Authority you're getting your life, then it's simply a matter of seeing it, because the expression is natural. It's what our minds are for. But you have to see it's limited. You have to see how the personality is being controlled by the infrastructure. These are different kinds of brains, they have different orientations, they have different focuses. And in every single case you're getting a variation that is possible out of that construct.

This is the way that everything works. Everything is layers and layers and layers and layers of binaries, whether you're looking at codons, hexagrams, colors, tones, whether you're looking at the BodyGraph, the interpretation of channels, the channel itself with the "this" and "that" at either end, it's all about binaries. You look at all the polarities in the wheel, the exact mirror images of the hexagrams on either side, all about these polarities.

The Program at Work

And this is the challenge that is there in mind. And in a polarity and a duality, and you know why because the genes are looking for something that is preferable, what works, what is more effective, what better way to make a sample. When I look at this laid out like this, I just look at a controlled sampling, because that's what it is. Ok, we have the role model guru brain. All right we try variation A and we try variation B, let's see how they do. If they're exactly the same color resonance, what happens? Is that boring? Is that a dead-end street? Is it creative enough? Is it this, is it that? If it's shift, if it's not resonance does this create problems, or does this create an advantage? And is it always so? Perhaps sometimes a shift is better in one place where resonance is better in another, and on and on and on. This is the program at work.

From the moment we started with the original yin/yang, bang, bang and away it went, this has been the movie. And evolution operates this way. And you can see all the possibilities for the evolutionary development of the brain. And of course, this goes further, we have tones underneath. It's very complex.

So, it's not about the personality trying to control the body and say, excuse me, we're supposed to be an opportunistic teacher here. Yes, well, very nice of you, but I happen to be a role model body and I'm not going to be an opportunistic body at all. You can be an opportunistic mind out of my role model body, but, that's it. This is the way that it works.

Juxtaposition

I want to make a comment here before I run out of time about juxtaposition. This is the bridge of bridges, if I can put it that way. When you're looking at profile structure and you're looking at transitional profiles—the 1/4, the 2/5, the 3/6 and then you get to the 4/1. You get to a shift from the right angle that is going to lead into left angle. You step into a singular state that is called juxtaposition that has its own geometry which is called fixed fate.

In fact, it is a very, very specific point, a very specific bridging point. It is why, by the way that it's a 4/1—my earliest description of a 4/1 was an oak tree. 4/1's even more so, in a sense, than 1/4's are very, very, very solid; very, very, very fixed. Something to recognize about the power that's intended to be here is that the strength of this oak tree is that it cannot be bent by the right angle below or the left angle above. It's something to think about.

The moment that the 4/1 is broken and nothing more tragic than a 4/1 being broken and not-self 4/1's get broken a lot. The tragedy of the broken 4/1 is that it has been dragged either to the right or to the left in terms of angle. In other words, it has lost its solid independence, its ability to stand as a pure broker between what is below and what is above. And in the 4/1 you have this particular point.

Interesting here, of course, that in this 4/1 we have on the design side we have a double 1-1. And of course, we always have the 6-1 as a configuration color wise, we always have 6-1 in terms of transitional profiles, we're dealing with that all the time. It's just the confluence of the three 1's, the two 4's, you can see how incredibly solid this is, in terms of the need for it to be fixed. And of course, what we're seeing here is a shift into the investigator.

Opportunist Roles
Color	Line	Color	Line
1	1	4/1	6	4
Investigator Teacher		Opportunist Buddha

The Investigator Teacher

After all, after the 6th line, we go back to the 1st line and so here we're looking at the investigator teacher, so we're looking again at the investigator brain. We're looking at this brain that needs to dig into things. It's got a teacher color, which in fact is ideal. That is, this combination together. So you have a brain that can really get into the detail, is ready to enjoy getting into that detail.

And as an opportunist, the opportunist can take advantage of that detail. It will take advantage of it though in the selfishness, if you will, of its 6th color motivation. This 6th color motivation is driving one to be whole within oneself. And of course, in so many ways that's uncomfortable for the opportunist. It is. These last three here, that is the 4/6 combinations with the Buddha role model, in combination with the opportunist this is often in conflict and usually what it leads to is that these are opportunists that have very limited networks.

And the kind of network that they have is a network that grows out of the interest of the other rather than the normal interest of the opportunist itself. In other words, because of the underlying brain system they're going to be much more absorbed in research than in expression. As a matter of fact, they will be reluctant to express, and it will be drawn from them, because this is what role models are for, and this is particularly true in the sense of the 6th color. In other words, to have their leadership or to have what is trustworthy drawn from them by the other.

Reexamine Your Physical System

But everything about the possibility of what it is to have an enriched mind is rooted in having a healthy brain. And having a healthy brain is all about giving authority to your vehicle. More and more as you investigate your design—all students of design have gone through this process of looking at your cross, thinking about your profile, learning about what it meant. Now is the time to reexamine it, and to reexamine it with a different perspective. Don't look at the personality. Don't. Look at the physical system, look at the brain system, and look at what you're being given to work with.

If you have tone knowledge, then look at the tone and see the quality of the sensory capacity that is part of what should be the focus of your brain. And begin to think about in your imagination what a brain that is designed in that way, what are the things that it would naturally be interested in, in relationship to your own life. Then take a look at your personality, and see what your personality, your mind is here for, the way it's designed to work. And recognize that it's designed to work based on the kind of brain system you have. And begin to synthesize that.

And then sit back, be correct, and watch it work. It is magical. But it always begins in the same place. This knowledge is design crystal knowledge. It came from the design crystal bundle field; it is form knowledge. And it is the difference. There is nothing else like it ever, ever, ever. This is the revealing of the form principle. And the moment that you understand what is being revealed, you get to see that everything about the nature of the personality is distortion. What we have on this plane is the distortion and vanity of the personality trying to change its brain system, trying to be what it isn't supposed to be which is to be the life, control the life, direct the life, guide the life, make decisions about the life. It's a lost cause.

You begin to live out your purpose when you are correct in terms of your form. This is how it all starts. This is where it starts for anyone. And to begin to see what that truly means. It means you're being aligned to the way in which you're intended to be cognitive on this plane. And that's what we're about. We're here through determination and motivation to express holistically the perfection of uniqueness.

Lecture Six

The Heretic Roles

All right, it is heretic day. Let's begin with something very basic. Let's begin with what is a heretical role, what does it actually mean? We know that if we look at a 5th line we have a fundamental or a basic understanding of the 5th line as a line of universalization. Now, universalization sounds very grand. But in fact, what it is is an enormous limitation. In other words, this is about the ability to be able to impact the stranger. What you get to see when you're looking at the prophet is that the prophet is the one that gets to influence those that it knows. This is the prophet's work. This is their advantage. Someone hears from somebody about the prophet, this is the way it works.

But the moment that you're dealing with the heretic and you're dealing with the universalization, you're dealing with the power to be able to impact strangers, which means that in a sense it is a power to influence a large number in relationship to the externalizing of the prophet, it is the ability to reach out to a larger number of beings.

The 5: Natural Paranoia

But what does the heretic actually bring? The interesting thing about the 5 is that there is a natural paranoia to the 5. And there is a natural paranoia to the 5 because in fact it appears it gets a good deal, but in fact it gets a pressure deal, always. In other words, the 5, if you look at the lines of the Rave I'Ching what you get to see is the 5 is the only exalted line. In other words, and this is the tradition of the original I'Ching that the 5th line carries with it all of these nice names—the general, the therapist, the “this and that,” the saint, the savior—these are all 5th line themes.

Basically, what that means is that the 5th line being comes into the world and immediately is facing positive projection. So, you're a mother, you have a 5th line baby and the first impression you get is this is going to be the best baby in the world until it pees on you, or whatever the case may be. The fact is, the moment that child breaks the illusion of its perfection, it's always going to live with the fact that it's always considered an under performer. That it didn't live up to its promise. And all 5th line beings have to deal with that.

So, this positive projection that they get, in other words, you can be my savior, you can be my saint, you can be my “this and that,” the moment they fall for the projection they're lost. The moment you fall for it, you're lost. The person that says to the 5, you're the answer for me—poof, don't fall for that; that is a projection. They don't know. It's one of the things about the 5 is that it is a chimera, in a way. You don't really see what's there; you're seeing the other, is seeing what it wants to see.

Of course, because it gets the positive projection, and it's a positive projection that is fundamental in the effect it has on strangers that therein lies its possibility to universalize. In other words, that positive projection gives it a chance. I'm a sun in 51, 5th line, I'm an initiator, I put out the word that I'm an initiator, you come to me and if you're not initiated, I'm in enormous trouble. But you're coming because the projection is there. And when you meet me you get the full package. And then you get into your own state of what you think you see.

And as long as the heretic can deliver something that satisfies that projection, everything is fine. As long as I can read your design after all of that, everything is fine. But if couldn't, if I was just another hip hop shyster in the world, the fact that everybody and their aunt would have known about it almost instantaneously. The living proof of the validity of Human Design is that its messenger is a 5th line being. If anybody is going to get smashed, it's a 5th line being. If anything doesn't work they're going to take the blame for it, they're going to take the heat.

The Heresy: Telling Your Truth

What's the heresy? That's the cute part. Where's the heresy in that. In other words, all you really have is a personality profile in which there is a possibility that somebody is ready to project on you that you can be this or that. The heresy is, in fact, that you can tell them the truth; that is, your truth. It's the same heresy that's available to everyone. It's not unique. What is unique in the configuration is the way in which the other meets the 5. That's what's different, that projection. And depending on where that 5 is, in what gate it is in, the way the design is, and so forth and so on, that's the way in which the projection is going to be oriented.

Because that heretic has that opportunity in that moment to tell the other, to offer the other its outer authority, and it is the power of that outer authority, if it is correct, that's what can be universalized to those that are ready for that. But there is a key in all of that. It's a key that I pay a great deal of respect to. It's in the 49th gate, in the 5th line. It's all about practical provisions in revolutionary times. And it is something to grasp about the essence of the heretic is that they are of value when the other is in crisis. This is the value.

And of course, because the other is in crisis they turn to the heretic for a different kind of answer, the projection that you can give me the real answer, you can give me the truth. The classic configuration of a 5th line personality is with a 1st line unconscious design. So we have the heretic that is the investigator. And remember that whenever we are looking at these roles that the roles have to bow down to the power of the vehicle, because the body is the life. This is an investigator body.

The Teacher

You can see, as we always do now, in understanding the cycle, we begin with the double 1-1. And of course here what we're looking at is a brain system that is designed for the investigation of "this and that." It's the perfect body for it; it's the investigator's body looking deeply into it. And its determination, that is, the teacher determination is again something that is very basic and very primitive. This is the dietary regimen of the caveman/cavewoman; this is the one thing at a time. And this is a sense of how deep this investigator will be and how rigid they'll be in terms of what they will look at, what they will deal with.

Investigator	Buddha	Heretic	Buddha
Hermit	Teacher	Heretic	Buddha

On the other side you have the heretic teacher. You have the fundamental resonance that is there in this 1st line capacity. So here you have the heretic that is going to provide that very, very detailed explanation, or whatever, revelation, whatever. And it is going to be dependent entirely on accepting the projection of the other.

You cannot impact the other unless you accept their projection. And their projection—the heretic has to be able to provide what is practical and satisfying in order to fulfill that projection. And here in this case you can see it will be the little detail coming out. Remember that universal doesn't mean changing the world. But it does mean the ability to change the stranger, to impact them deeply. This is the power of the heretic. And yet the heretic cannot go looking for them.

The Relationship between the 2 and the 5

It's interesting about the relationship between the 2 and the 5. The 2 is also a line of projection. It is about those being able to look into that 2 and see something there. But to see something there that needs to be brought out, needs to be refined, needs to be perfected, needs to be worked on, some hidden jewel, some hidden gift. In essence, it is a negative projection: You have all this talent and you do nothing with it. You could be just incredible at this and look at you; you're a couch potato, all this kind of stuff. And on the other side you have the positive projection: You can do anything—you can be this, you can be that, you can be my everything. How different.

And the 2nd line waits to be called. It waits for the negative projection—I see in you this great gift—waiting for the call. And the 5th line calls. The dilemma is this call, because without cognition it is blind. This is the heretic that cannot fulfill the projection because it is not cognitively correct. It is only with the cognition that it recognizes amongst those that are projecting on it, which it can call. Not every one deserves the call.

I had a lovely birthday present this year. I was given a Samurai sword. I rather liked that. By the way, it's not a real one, but a plastic kid's version. It was quite nicely done. It has a special place in my life. And it is a byproduct of a story I told not too long ago, a couple of times I've told that story. I did introductory lectures for many, many years, and so many of them that I don't want to even try to remember.

I can remember an evening going up on stage in Vienna and everybody was excited. It was a successful event and there were a lot of people there, 100 people, something like that. I had a very funny feeling as I was going up on that stage. I knew that if I looked out at this crowd and I looked into their eyes that I would get my angry muse. I have an angry muse. I have my "you're all idiots" muse that shows up every once in a while when I see that there are sheep in front of me who could never be wolves.

I realized that night that I had to stop doing these introductory lectures because my fantasy was to go down into the crowd with a sword and say "next life" and chop off a few heads; well, not a few, actually, there would be quite a few. Unfortunately that would end my career and would be difficult on my family, so I've retired from doing public introductory lectures. One of the dilemmas for the 5 is that the call to just anyone is pointless. And yet, when there is no awareness and there is no cognition, then that's what you get and that's why you get so many heretics that are burnt at the stake over and over again because they lack the fundamental discernment that's necessary.

The Heretic and Acoustic Frequency

It's also interesting to think about the 5's in this case and to think about the acoustic phenomenon that is so much a part of what is the heretic. That is, that the personality heretic is dangerous through the expression of their outer authority. This is where they have their power, is in that expression of outer authority. And one of the things about the heretic that is correct is that there is a particular frequency to their verbal audio. There is a frequency that affects people. It affects people in an unusual way. And it's not so much that it may seem like they have a distinguished, attractive, sexy, this, that or the other voice. There is a quality that is simply there in the frequency.

Obviously, when we are looking at this way of looking at personality roles as they operate in a cross, we have our spiral. And we know that in our spiral we have these resonances that are one aspect of the spiral and then we have these dissonances that are the transitional form of the spiral. So we have many different kinds of heretical roles. I'm a heretic priest. We have different kinds of heretical roles. And with each of them, in the way in which they express themselves, there is going to be an acoustic shift in all of these.

It would be really interesting—you see this all the time in modern police movies, these kinds of things where they have these kinds of sound analysis, voice analysis, technologies and they get wonderful comparisons and readouts from that stuff. I assume one can buy these things commercially. But anyway, it would be very interesting to gather up the 11 variations of the 5/1's and to do acoustic sampling of them, because it's clear, at least my basic understanding of this, that theoretically each of them should have something unique as a family.

I don't mean person-to-person, but I mean groups of each would have a commonality in their frequency that would not be there in relationship to the next step in the spiral. Just as a musician, it would be interesting, musically what kind of progression that actually is. In other words, what kind of tonal progression and I don't mean tone in the substructure sense, but in sound sense, how that will operate. It's very interesting.

If I'm not mistaken the ancient Greeks, because the development of music is a very strange thing, but I think there was an attempt to create an 11-tone music. I'll have to look into that, because that's an interesting thought. It would be interesting to compare that to the 11 variations that are there in the heretic tonally.

Dissonance

Let's get to the dissonance. I want you to think about dissonance. It's not something that's taught very often in Human Design and it is again one of those fundamentals that when I first began to introduce the understanding of lines, the structure of the hexagram, profiles, I introduced harmonies and resonance and dissonance and I began to show people how, for example, the relationship that you have in an electro-magnetic connection with somebody. You have an activation on one side and they have an activation on the other. You happen to have a 2nd line activation and they happen to have the 5th line activation. That happens to be a harmony. That harmony creates a different frequency in the way in which your electro-magnetic connection works.

It's very different if you would have a 3 and they have a 5, because then you're going to have dissonance. And that dissonance creates a different frequency, still operating within the same construct of the same channel and so forth and so on, but it carries with it a different kind of quality. So understanding these harmonies and these resonances are something that's important. But dissonance is a key, in a sense.

Let's say, for example, that you have a hanging gate somewhere and the transit field is coming along and some planet goes into the opposite gate. Let's say you have the 1st line. So, the planet goes into the 1st line and you have a resonance with that. You sort of notice it, but probably not unless something would happen and then you'd look to see what's going on and you'd see, ah, I have that, because the fact is with a resonance it's very familiar. It's like it's not really recognized.

If you have a harmony, so by the time that planet would get to the 4th line, if you have a harmony between your 1st line and that 4th line, this is something that you notice, and not notice in the sense that it's jarring or whatever, but you're aware there's something different and you go look for it. But when you have dissonance you're really aware of it, because dissonance can be uncomfortable because it makes the connection very pronounced. In a sense, if I can say it this way, it makes the conditioning louder.

So, what we're looking at here in the sense of this chain, is that we're looking at we're moving into a dissonance. We move away from, for example, the teacher teacher resonance and the next step we have is that we have the teacher guru. And of course, this is going to be different. There is going to be a jarring quality to this. I would speculate that for the dissonance heretics it is much more difficult for them to be able to express what it is that essentially they want to get across.

The Guru

Take for example this teacher. Again, we have the commonality that is there on the personality side, but of course we're having the shift that's taking place on the spiral and we move to the guru. And one of the things we know about the guru is that the guru is not looking for the detail. This is not what the 2 theme is all about. The 2 theme always carry a naturalness, a natural gift. As we've seen in the negative projection, even the digging out of it is still the digging out of the jewel that's there.

Of course, this is one of the clichés of the guru to be able to discern, to find that place in you that can awaken you, that can bring you out, that can open you up, and so forth and so on. But everything about this is natural, so there are no facts. There is no "this is how I do what I'm doing, this is what I do," which means it's that kind of brain because we're dealing with the design side. And when you're dealing with the design side you have to understand that this is the life. It's the life.

This is the way the brain is going to work. This is not a brain that wants to study. This is a teacher that wants to teach without, in essence, having to understand what they need to teach, because in the end that's the way they will teach. They will teach based on whatever their sense of it-ness happens to be. It's not going to be investigated. This is not a brain that digs into things.

What we do know in the continuity of the 2 is that there is a special quality in them that goes down to the 2nd tone that brings with it the unusual capacity to actually be able to grasp what is not yet graspable, to be prepared for it, to see something, to see a possibility that others cannot see. It's a special gift of this particular kind of brain.

So how is the heretic going to act out of this? Remember it is the design that is going to make the decisions if any of this is going to operate correctly. So the design—that brain, the natural—is going to base decisions not on its research, this is not going to be this deep investigative force. It can't with this determination.

We know about this determination. You can understand the way in which this system is going to work by understanding the way they're intended to eat. The very selective perfect diet, nothing else, and then repeated. So, this is an investigator that will investigate certain things, nothing else. That's it. And that is what they are consistently going to put out.

So, this is the heretic that in a sense, the motivation to teach that over time they may get better at it, but in fact they're going to hammer at the same thing over and over and over again, because this is what they're for. We need it, like everything else. It is simply another aspect of the way in which the collective is moved, because when you look at the 5th line that's basically what its role is, is to move the collective.

And then of course you can see the moment you go back to the resonance in the spiral again you go back to continuity. If you were to meet these two, not only would they have a different tonal frequency, the sound quality frequency, but there is something going to appear to be much more natural about the investigator guru that is a heretic guru. There is no attempt to try to make up for the lack of research. There isn't. This is a motivation that in essence is capable of bringing a deep understanding of what life is about because it is about allowing it to come to you.

And here the heretic guru can be very, very powerful in seeing within you what you need to wait for. They all have their possibilities—by the way, we don't see any of these creatures. We don't. I can't go through this process without reminding you that the vast majority of humanity is in transference, that even those beings that begin their process in Human Design have dilemmas with their mind and it is difficult for them to totally give up the mind controlling their living and making decisions for them. It is not possible to live out these roles if you're not correct. It's not possible.

So, it's simply something to grasp that I'm talking about theoretical characters in a mythological set, because that's what it is. It would be fascinating to have the unique example of each of these variations and hear what they have to say and the way they say it because that's the only way ultimately that we can really begin to truly understand how nuanced all this is. What we get instead is we get the transference and we get the deep motivational transference and we get people that are operating out of their openness and they're not living lives in which where they are is what is correct for them

The old cliché expression about lost souls, I don't see it as lost souls, I just see it as they're lost, period, because it's only your vehicle that can bring you to the geometry that is correct for you, that can bring you to those places in life where the possibility is for you to have the life that is yours and to be able to express the beauty of the personality which is its outer authority.

Again, as I mentioned last week to understand that this binary spiral and the way it shifts from resonance to dissonance this is simply a way in which the program gets to examine the byproduct of all this. What are these variations of self-reflected consciousness through these themes and which is superior. Is the resonance superior to the dissonance? And it's not so much that there's anything to judge that, but in the greater Darwinian sense, there is. In other words, the efficiency of the call, how efficient the call can be, how powerful it is as a force of renewal in the evolutionary process, it's important to see where that comes from. What is the source of that?

I know myself as a heretic and as a correct heretic that it is astonishing when one begins to recognize the power that lies in such a force because it has its own life. It has nothing to do with me as a man. It really doesn't, it just simply takes on its own life. This is what happens when you are on your cross. It's what happens when you begin to express an outer authority that is not a question, but an inherent truth of one's own experience. And something, obviously, that is essential if the personality is going to be able to fulfill itself.

So, these shifts are interesting in the sense of—again, it's duality at work, pointing the way towards the competition, in a sense, because that is, in fact, what the whole genetic survival mechanism leads to, this competition for superior ways in which to fulfill one's particular possibility.

The Priest

Again, moving through the spirals let's take a look at each of these before we move on. Think about these as bodies, because if you think about them as bodies you get a better sense of it. The investigator body, you have to have the feel for it. Everything about it is stimulated by the hunt. That's the thing that's so exciting. It is a brain that is deeply, deeply connected to the search, deeply connected to rooting things out. This is the brain system. And whether that rooting out is so it can teach the foundation or whether that rooting out is so that it can express this unique specialty perception. The point is that it's an investigator, and it's an investigative brain that is being driven to investigate with a certain point, a certain perspective to develop a certain kind of cognitive potential.

Again, we're not looking at tones in this chain. It would take much too much time at this stage to go through such things. But the fact is that obviously when color is correct in its relationship to line, then we have the underlying tonal cognition coming to the surface.

The 3 as a theme, the 3rd body is a body that is designed to be deeply resilient. And it is this resilience that gives this quality to this kind of brain. It is the kind of investigator that never gives up. You can kill it. This is a way to stop that. But it never gives up. And of course, this is one of the things about the power that is there, but it's also a concern for the vehicle itself. It's interesting when you think about in terms of the 3rd color as dietary regimen we're dealing with a hot/cold binary. This is really the way in which they work. This is a hot/cold brain in the sense of what happens to it in its investigation.

You can see the limitation of the personality. The brain is set up in a certain way. The body is set up to feed the brain in a certain way. It is the body that puts you in exactly the right place. It is this brain that is setting you up to preach. I do a pretty good job of preaching. The only thing I miss is a Southern Baptist accent and Jesus as my guide, because what that preaching is all about is that pointed, very pointed determination.

And the interesting thing about that kind of brain system is that the personality is stuck with it. It's all right if you're priest priest. Then there is this resonance that is there. But there is a jarring-ness that comes. Remember that the guru personality is the hope personality. This is the true hope personality. It's sitting by the riverbank, it's watching the river flow, and it knows precisely what to wait for. This is the motivation. The motivation of this heretic is don't move.

And everything about this being is "I have to tell them," because that's what the brain system is, "I have to tell them." The guru doesn't have to tell anybody anything. You've got to go to the guru and beg to get into the door just to have a chance to get close. And a guru may shoo you away—next life, whatever. But the priest, pity the poor priest, over and over and over again they continue the relentless expression. That's so interesting. I know; I'm a heretic priest. This relentless "you follow your strategy and honor your inner authority." And one is helpless in that, after all. By the way, I don't have a priest body.

It's interesting to simply begin to see that as long as the personality wants to be the driver, you're lost. That's the whole thing. As long as the personality goes along with it, as long as you go along with the way your brain works, it may sound silly, but it's not, as long as you go along with it which means you're not interfering with it, then your particular variation is going to take advantage in any way that it can.

I do not see a disadvantage or advantage in being this or that. I don't; I never do. It always comes down to the same thing. Everything is a disadvantage when you are not correct. It is simply different. And clearly it is more difficult, in a sense, as not-self to be able to deal with the byproduct of transferred dissonance. Yes, there is that. But in terms of correctness, no there's no difference, because correctness means that the mind is not involved in decision making, which means it's not trying to be the driver, it's not trying to control the life.

The moment that the mind is not doing that, that's another movie entirely, totally different. And then the possibility of the heretic role comes out. This is me; I'm a heretic priest, investigator prophet. I honestly don't know, in a sense, how that works, if you know what I mean. The 4 body is a vulnerable body. I know that; I live in deep isolation. It's a vulnerable body. It has its potential, obviously. That is, it has its potential to be influential, the 4th line theme. By the way, I'm not; I don't know why I did that. I'm often adrift. I have a priest body. Sorry about that.

The Prophet

But anyway, it is interesting, isn't it. The dilemma, if there is any dilemma in that particular combination is that the fatigue that is inherent in the vehicle of the prophet investigator, how tired they can get of investigating. The priest is relentless in their investigation. The prophet gets tired and gets tired if the investigation is not fulfilling. It's one of the themes of the 4th line being that if the 4th line being does not invest correctly in the other then their life is going to be drained; their life energy is going to be drained.

And obviously in somebody who is going to be correct, this 4th color underneath is going to be very significant for them in terms of if they're not correct how difficult it will be for them to get to that important information, to get to that influential information in their investigation. And of course, it's also going to be the thing that makes the decision. The 1, the 1st line, the investigator is insecure socially, all lower trigram lines are, and has a tendency towards looking rather than getting involved. So, there can be dilemmas in that sense about the kinds of relationships that are there. The other side of that is that in order for that personality to be relentless it needs to have the support of the vehicle. And of course, in this sense, the health of the vehicle is going to be deeply important in terms of benefiting the personality.

When we go to the resonance, again you have the advantage that arises out of that given correctness, that you have the right kind of motivation for the right kind of brain system. When determination and motivation are in resonance there are all kinds of potential, in that sense. Here is a heretical investigator that truly has an unusual power. In other words, they have a power not just to influence the stranger; they have a power to influence just about any one. And it comes to them out of this underlying 4th theme that is there. And of course, it's well supported.

Again, it's going to be a question of whether somebody is operating correctly and ultimately this is the first side and this is the easy way to go and then of course you have to deal with the challenge of the mind. But we're all here to gain easy access to what is, in fact, our true bodies. And of course, that's what Strategy and Authority brings you to. These bodies do belong to us, this is who we are. It is very important for us to see that through PHS these bodies can be nurtured in a way that is deeply, deeply beneficial for them.

The Messenger

Here we have one of these, in a sense, a false resonance. That is, it's not a resonance between the lines; it's a resonance from the design color to the 5th line of the heretic. You've got the 5th color at work. And we see that it carries the thematic of the messenger. This is deeply acoustic. We know that the dietary regimen of a 5th line being is something that demands a controlled acoustic environment whether that is a high or low density acoustic environment. They're very, very sensitive to acoustics.

So, this is an investigator that has an extraordinary capacity to investigate acoustically. In other words, this is somebody that has a great ear; this is somebody that can really take things in. This is somebody that can "read between the lines" in terms of the audio. This is somebody that takes in more than the words, takes in the message that is there behind the words. Of course, this is a physical system after all. It is a unique kind of brain function. Everything about the possibility of this acoustic function is that it leads to the best platform for expression. In other words, this is somebody that will have basically the potential physically to have a very strong acoustic influence on others.

Now, it's going to depend on what kind of heretic it is caught up with, whether it is going to be the prophet or it's going to be the resonance of the messenger messenger. Again, we have these two different phenomena that are work here because of the change in the spiral. The acoustic investigator, the difference between the prophet and the messenger is again the difference between these 4th and 5th themes of being able to externalize and to be able to universalize. The other thing is the prophet is about contact. In other words, it is about physical contact. The prophet can impact you by simply putting their hand on you, the messenger needs to whisper in your ear, so to speak. So there is a difference in their approach.

Again, the concern that I always have is the dilemma of the heretic itself. That is, the dilemma of what it is to be a 5th line personality and not operate correctly. It's not just a matter that all of this is lost. It is a matter that 5th line personalities are deeply damaged in this life by their incorrectness, they're deeply damaged. In a sense, they receive more punishment than any other profile for not fulfilling the expectation of others. It is, to a degree true to the 5th line body as well. But it's not as pronounced as the 5th line personality. The 5th line personality that is not-self can suffer so deeply from its blunders because it will, in fact, blunder because it doesn't have the cognition to recognize who to call, nor the cognitive depth to be able to express and externalize their outer authority with the value of their unique perception. They don't have any of that. They are so caught in their transference; they're so caught in their open centers and all of that stuff that they're lost.

The Buddha

I'd like to meet a heretical investigator that is a Buddha messenger. I think that would be really interesting. The interesting thing about the Buddha theme is that it brings, in a sense, a new kind of brain, a transitional brain, and a brain that is less concerned about the other. It is a divine quality of selfishness. It is not to the exclusion of the other, by the way. It has nothing to do with that. It simply has to do with the way in which this brain is going to be preoccupied in the life process. It's going to be very much self absorbed at a new level. Again, the self absorption is what we see in the perfection of the 1/3, two lower trigrams.

When we look at transition in the 6 what we're looking at is a movement that is going towards the next 1/3, it's going towards the next spiral, the next movement. And in that sense it is a unique quality of selfishness in which the perfection of the life, the personal life, the unique life, is really the point. The messenger of this, that is, the messenger motivation, to literally seduce the other and to seduce the other with selfishness, is a lovely concept. I'm all for it. But anyway, I've not met any of these people.

I have great empathy for the heretic. I remember when I did my first collection of charts here on the island, all my black sheep friends. So many of them were 3/5's much more than anything else, a huge number of 3/5's, some 5/1's, some 5/2's, but a huge number of 3/5's. And of course, for the unconscious 5 it's very difficult because they in fact don't even know why they're being punished because they didn't know that anybody had real projection on them in the first place. It's unconscious, it's not who they think they are.

Like anything else, and of course, it is so obvious that this is true for any configuration, without correctness you really end up in a terrible situation in which what is in fact a blessing becomes your curse. This is the way duality works. The beauty of what it is to be you, the potential of what it is to be you gets lost. And in that homogenization are the cruelties that life brings to us, and they are cruelties.

The Transition

I can't leave off without looking at our transition. Transitions are always fascinating. The 5/2 is a very fascinating configuration. Obviously, you are dealing with the harmonic themes of projection. You're dealing with what is in fact a heretical hermit. This heretical hermit really doesn't want to go out. It is one of the most difficult things for the heretic hermit to actually step out of their hermitage. It's very difficult to have enough forces around them that there's any one that they're interested to call.

It is a very, very interesting configuration. And of course, like all transitional profiles it has a 6-1 color configuration. Again, we come back to what is one of the magical things about these various levels of spirals that you see in Human Design. That is, we see the spiral operating at this level within the structure and at the same time if you look at profile you'll see the same thing—the 1/3 becoming the 1/4 becoming the 2/4—you have this spiraling motion with this on and off switching of personality and design.

Clearly the transitional profiles are deeply significant in the sense that they are intended to be the harmonic bridges through which the information that moves through us as a species that that information can move correctly through the spiral chain, because after all, we are linked together in a much larger configuration, in that sense.

What we do know, of course, that because the not-self is so dominant we know that these beings again do not operate correctly. And in not operating correctly obviously their motivations are different, the determination is not being followed. They're deeply homogenized and they're operating out of their not-self mind. There is no way that they are an honest broker any more or they are the true and correct bridge to link this and that together in the chain that makes up the consciousness program.

It's not so much to point a finger of blame, because it isn't about any of that because every aspect is important, because every aspect has its place. It's simply about understanding the commonality that exists in all transitional profiles. Whether you are a 1/4 or a 2/5 or a 3/6 or a 4/1 or here a 5/2 or a 6/3 you all have something deeply in common. You have the same motivation, you have the same determination. In other words, there is a deep bond, in essence, that connects all transitional profiles. And it is a bond that does not surface until they are operating correctly because otherwise they're only getting the transference.

By the way, I guess in the not-self there is a bond and they all share the same transference. They're all running around trying to be leaders. And oh, they get smashed. There's nothing worse than a 5/2 that's not prepared, because they have to be truly prepared. Without inner authority it is so difficult for them to go out into the world.

Correctness is Magical

Correctness is magical, this whole business. It doesn't matter if I ever teach another word in Human Design. Strategy and Authority—in a way, to see it exists is just unbelievable. I am somebody with all my 1st lines that is addicted to the state of being in wonder. I do enjoy it and I remain in wonder that there is a way. Because, in fact, throughout all of my work in this knowledge, the deeper I go all I get to see is how powerful the program is, how powerful the not-self is, how powerful the homogenized world is. How overwhelmingly powerful the program and the larger cosmic evolutionary direction is, it's all incredible.

Just to go through a couple of semesters of DreamRave is to give me the shivers of the nature of the programming, the way in which we are in a thrall that is without a key is impossible to get out of. The magic that we have is not just that we can journey together and look at all of these mechanical variations and how fascinating all of that is, because it is, it's interesting to dig into the meat of the mechanics of being. But one should not at any moment forget what this is about, is that you cannot conquer the demons with your mind, that you can never straighten out your life from your mind. This is not where it happens. This is not where your purpose is, it's not where your truth is. It's not your mind and your intelligence that is going to do it for you; it's your body and its intelligence that is going to do it.

To put the mind in its place, to see the deep, deep limitation of the personality, the audacity—heretic roles, yeah, of course—but boy oh boy, this is what makes them happen. This is the framework (design side), this is the limitation, and this is what it's all about. And this (personality side) is a helpless byproduct of it. And nothing to do but to watch it as it emerges. Nothing.

Over here (design side) is where everything works, where the whole basis of your life, its quality, its beauty, it's all set. And once you enter into that process, the challenge is always your mind. Trust your inner authority; that's my priestly word for the day. And I am resilient when it comes to that. Trust it. It's only when you trust it that you can slowly, truly, genuinely, authentically let go of your mind. Let go of it; it's not important.

It isn't going to make things better. It is not the answer. And it doesn't need a purpose. All you need is to follow your true authority, the vehicle's authority and watch what happens, watch it, don't do anything about it. The longer you trust it, and the deeper you trust it, and time, because it's all about time, you're adults, it takes time—years and years and years and years. Seven years for the primary shift.

Role Model Roles

All right, we come to the close of our process and as I started in the beginning I find that a rather amusing title but nonetheless, I won't get into that again because it didn't get any laughs the first time.

The Role Model: An Example of Unique Purpose

I talked about this yesterday in both of my classes because in the second year class in Rave Psychology talking about the 6th color theme, talking about its continuity and talking about the significance of what it is to be a role model. First of all, I'd like to go back to something here and deconstruct a phrase, because I think that this phrase 'role model,' again like so many expressions that we have in the language, we end up giving values to names and go along with a homogenized sense of what they actually mean.

When I look at role model the first thing that I'm really looking at is this term 'role' because in human design, role is something that we see played out through the profile. In other words, in order for us to be able to live out our roles we need to be able to live out our profiles, which means we need to be able to live out our crosses which means we have to be correct within the nature of our design.

When I look at the term 'role model' I'm looking at an example of purpose, because basically that's what it means, an example of unique purpose. So my translation for role model—an example of unique purpose—is not the way in which, in essence, the role model is generally understood. And we have to understand this terminology within its context. Everything about the emergence of Human Design and the understanding of first and foremost what it means for us to be where we are in the evolutionary process, if we go back and we need to go back we need to see that the end of the seven-centered phenomena, the seven-centered human was really the end of the key role in the development of humanity being heretical.

It seems clear to me that I am the end of something and not its beginning. I am a 5th line being, a 5th line personality, I am an archetypal heretic. Basically I am a seducer, which is the tradition of the seven-centered being and the seven-centered gurus and masters and all of that collection of teachers and messengers that were part of the seven-centered consciousness evolution. It was all rooted in seduction. It was rooted in wolves and sheep.

It's clear to me that the remnants of that, what we see as a variation within a nine-centered being, that is, since 1781, basically what we see is the attachment that the nine-centered human has to the seven-centered tradition, because no nine-centered tradition has emerged. It has not. If you look at the new age and you look deeply into it, you will see that there is a huge percentage of people that are practising seven-centered yoga. If you think that is bringing them into contact with their nine-centered life, it's another joke you can laugh at tomorrow because it's not. It is another form of homogenization.

We are very much caught in the thrall of what we have inherited out of the seven-centered species. We are not seven-centered. We are nine-centered. And the whole concept of the role model has changed from the moment we left the seven to the nine. One of the things to look at carefully is to look at the 10th gate and to look at the 6th line, because it is a deep expression of how we understand the nature of role model as we have inherited it from the past, because if you look at any 6th line in the Rave I'Ching, you will not see the third way. You will not see the completion of the mutation of the 6th line. You see the fundamental binary that is there.

If you look at the 10.6 you see that binary. In other words, you see somebody whose actions match their words, or you see somebody who is a hypocrite. That is, who tells you what to do but does not do it themselves. These are the two variations of the seven-centered 6th line. Those are its two variations. In other words, this is the stage upon which a mutation takes place.

Now, the reason there is no third way expressed in any 6th lines, and it's important to understand that, is that there is no way to express it. Ah, here lies the beauty of all this. I've had this experience many, many times over my 20 years in Design. I meet somebody as a not-self and then I wait and see who they are, because who I meet is not who they are. And it is so clear to me and it is so obvious to me, as a matter of fact, if the other could understand how obvious it was to me I suppose it would be quite uncomfortable, but it is deeply obvious. And I wait and see who they are, because you cannot know. You cannot know because uniqueness is uniqueness.

I'm a language maven, I love the language, and I love words. There's an old timer that wrote for the New York Times for many, many years, and Herald Tribune, which we get over here in Europe, and he was infuriated over somebody in some article saying "more unique," which is about the dumbest thing you could possibly say because it's stupid—unique is unique, there is nothing else. In the sense that unique is unique there is no measurement, there is no comparison, there is no framework, none.

We Don't Know What Role Models Are

We don't know what the hell role models are. I don't. Yeah, I have a theoretical concept, and I see the emergence of 6th line beings in correctness, so I begin to get a flavor of what that is. But you have to understand that this is not something that—what happens when you learn about Human Design and you learn about the 6th line in your profile and you learn about the three phases of life, you talk to people about the first part or the second part and everybody is in agreement, everybody is comfortable with what's being said because it is clear and understandable and it's what you live.

But if you're trying to guide a person to going off the roof, and I know, I've been there, trying to do that for years to get 6th line beings to recognize that their life is in danger when they're at the edge of that roof, literally, that their life is in danger, how important it is for them to be correct. But I don't know what it's going to mean when they're off the roof. There is no way of knowing. In fact, it is not simply a matter that it's their profile, it's the particular cross, it's the design, it's the color, the tones, the bases, the this, the that, it goes on and on and on and on in its uniqueness. So there is no way of knowing what that expression is.

This is only possible when you have fulfilled or are fulfilling your purpose. That's what it's all about. Remember that the role models that we see, whether it's the 3/6, the 4/6, the 6/2, the 6/3's those role models that we see in terms of profile, again in our looking at them, particularly as not-self, the dilemmas of the Saturn cycle, the dilemmas of the roof, all of those are just very, very clear because they are old, they're old stuff and the 6 has been through that old stuff over and over again, incarnation after incarnation. For 6's, I don't mean individuals in that sense, that they're always the same profile; always that binary; never transition.

My way of understanding the seven-centered 6th being is that as they enter into their roof stage, that's the last stage they ever have. They get more distant, they get colder, they get more aloof, they get further away, and that's the end of the process. There is no mutation.

Since 1781 the mutation has been in place. And everything about Human Design, everything about Human Design is about making sure that we understand that we are in mutative times in that we know how to live in them correctly. And that the focus on these times is something that is expressed in the very way in which we assemble a chart. That is, the nodes of the moon representing the life and representing the division of the life, that based on the Uranian cycle that we have this new life, literally new life.

It's hard to understand because it is not a part of our real memory to know what it meant to live in a Saturnian cycle as a seven-centered being for 85,000 years. That Saturnian cycle was deeply, deeply cruel. Everything was compressed. You were adult very quick. Your life was literally very short. We do not have this true memory. We have come in at a time in which it appears that everybody gets to live longer and longer and longer and it's been going on throughout this entire cycle. Now it's been aided by many things. It has been added by the Cross of Planning and the ability to be able to build institutions, to train scientists, and endless kinds of things that are involved in all of this.

A New Life Pattern

But something to simply grasp is that all of this is about a new life, a new life pattern, a new life pattern that is nine-centered. And all of this is geared to the viability of this pattern, the success of this pattern based on 6th line beings, because they are the ones that are carrying the mutation and conditioning all of us to it.

I'm a 5/1, I am not mutative in that way. And yet, I get to experience the transitions, the Saturn, the Kiron, the flowering, the new cycle, because I'm conditioned by all the 6th line beings on the planet that are carrying this mutation. And the fact is, unfortunately for them that those of us that do not carry the 6 are better equipped to live in this new age as survivors because the pressure isn't on us. We will take the conditioning from all the surviving 6's, and I say surviving.

When you come off the roof, within the context of the program, you are either going to demonstrate the mutation or it's a failed mutation. And that means you. The scientists with their fireflies, or whatever it is they play around with and they change a little of this in this one, and a little in that one, and they wait to see what's going to work. And the ones where it doesn't work, they drop dead. It's just one of those things. And it's one of the things to understand about being a 6th line being, it's one of the most important things to understand is the vulnerability, not the old fashioned vulnerability that you know from the so-called 3rd line phase in the first Saturn cycle of the life, that's old fashioned seven-centered vulnerability. That's the crazy that leads to the wise. That's the wild that leads to the sedate. It's all this binary between the hot and cold, hot/cold, hot/cold. It's all the old stuff.

What matters is that moment when Kiron comes around the block, because this is when you're on trial, mutatively, literally. To get to this place, we are moving in this end of the seven-centered, 1781, in this movement towards the emergence of the potential of the rave. We're moving towards a huge shift in our world. It's huge. And you need to be reminded of it and you need to be aware of it because it's going to make the most incredible difference to the lives of our children and our grandchildren.

The Cross of Planning: Moving into a Different Age

We don't know anything but the Cross of Planning. As a matter of fact, the nine-centered being emerged during the Cross of Planning, so there has never been a nine-centered being that wasn't determined in their life process by a background frequency, this consistent background frequency of the Cross of Planning, the community, the talent, the focus, all of the things that are part of that cross. All of it has been the basis of nurturing the potential of this transformation.

But when we get to 2027, we get to a totally different cycle. And nobody who has ever lived in these forms knows what it is, or what it's like. And nobody understands what it's going to feel like when it goes away, because it will—just the turning of the wheel. And we turn to what? We turn to the 6th line, the backwards retrograde precession of the equinox. From the 1 where we are now, the foundation, the last chance in Eden, eat from the tree of knowledge. This is where we are now; eat from the tree of knowledge. Get your fill; you will never see it again. And there will be no masters to teach you, because we're moving into a different age.

Now, nothing happens on a pinpoint, we know that. It takes time. Evolution is slow. It takes time. But it will be felt. I said the other day that I hope I live long enough to feel it. My greatest excitements in Human Design have been the experience of what I consider to be the fantastic. The first time I felt the moon make a connection that turned on my emotional system, I couldn't get over it. This rock, big pock marked rock, half a million miles away, that this rock in its movement could make me emotional. It was an incredible experience for me. I will carry it with me until the end; incredible.

I remember the first time I experienced a nodal shift, really experienced it. It was one of the very, very first trainings I ever did. I did in San Juan Bautista in what was my village then in Ibiza on the roof of a little apartment building. I can remember taking the students, I think two or three, I don't remember—there was a 43/23 nodal shift. The 43/23 was going out and the next thing coming in. For months everybody had the 43/23 so obviously everybody had the "I know, I know, I know," and a lot more chatty, obviously because you've got a defined throat for the whole planet.

I sat with my students in the café Vistalegre, my hangout for years. The place was full of tourists. It was summertime. There was this hustle and bustle and loud noise, that kind of drone of so many people in conversation. I sat there and waited. It was fantastic. I don't know whether the silence lasted any more than a couple of seconds. It didn't have to last longer. It just stopped for a moment. All that talking, all that background, it just suddenly stopped. It stopped exactly on that moment. It was incredible. And you see, the background frequency, oh, you can't imagine how profound this is.

These are the great cycles that determine a civilization in its time. These cycles are enormous. There are hundreds and hundreds of years. This one started at the beginning of the 1600's. It started when Shakespeare was writing plays. We have lived this whole time under this one influence. And it's going. And we're going to be thrown into something that is totally different—the phoenix, the 20/34, the 55, the mutated 59, the deep individual survival busyness, the selfishness, the 6. And think about those 6's, the wisdom of the 6 of the 20, the power of that 6 in the 34. We enter into the 6; we enter into the full expression of the mutation. And then everyone will be challenged to live as a role model, because if you don't, you're going to perish. That's what it's about.

Oh, yeah, it's dramatic, there's no question about that. How many people do you think are kept alive on this planet today by international humanitarian agencies? How many? You have any idea each day how many are kept alive—50,000, 100,000 who otherwise would die that day like the other 40,000 children, babies die every day for no reason.

There is a vast, vast slice of humanity whose very existence is maintained by the results of the Cross of Planning. The 40/37, there are very few crosses that are defined that have definition as an aspect of their arms, that here there is two, that is this deeply, deeply powerful movement from one defined process to another, the shift from the 40/37 to the 20/34, I want to tell you, that is a huge shift.

The 20/34 doesn't care about anybody. It's too busy looking after itself in the now. Remember, there is no 57 there; there is no 10, just a pure manifesting generating buzz. That's going to replace the support of the 40/37? We're not even talking about individuality when we talk about the 20/34, it's integration, we're back to survival. And the 20/34 has no problem with not being supportive of the other. It is pure individual empowered survival in the now. What do you think is going to happen to all of those international, humanitarian, all of those organizations, all of those things that have been built on the back of the tribal community support mechanism.

When you look at the Cross of Planning you have this perfect collective, tribal balance. The 40/37 demands that we care for, that we support our tribe, our community. That ultimately under collective influence the community can be seen as the community of man, that we dig into our pockets for tsunami victims and earthquake victims and disease victims and aids victims and on and on and on.

And those of us with any kind of intellectual liberalism look upon that as human beings actually being ok, because they can care and they can give and they can support. It's not them. They are not-self. The not-self does what it's "told." It does precisely the way in which it is programmed to do. And the program says, support, develop the skills for support, the focus on support, to support the development of skills, to support the development of focus, to share it, this planet that is one vast global village and community. Thank you to the cycle of planning.

I'm in no hurry to see it go away. It's everything we've ever known. It is a changing of the world. I watched an extraordinary film the other day—Apocalypto. I'm not a particular fan of Mel Gibson, the actor, or particularly the person. But he has a feel for the past that's quite remarkable. There is no English in this, it's all native language and it's basically an insight to pre-conquistador South American culture. There is this moment at the end of the film where the characters in the film have gone through quite an ordeal and they've survived it. They're standing on the shoreline. Out in the distance are the sails of the ships of the Spaniards. It's an incredible moment, because it's one we're looking at. A whole world is going to change; our world. The world of our children and our grandchildren as I said, it's their world that's going to change.

My children hopefully will live through this transition. It will be something to experience. Again, it's not like it happens on a dime. It will take a couple of hundred years for the institutions that have been built up to fall apart. It's not the first time this has happened. Civilizations rise and fall, they do. And they rise and fall because it is part of the program and its process.

You need to understand all of that to understand the role model, because you need to see what the role model is for. If the future is not going to be supportive, if seduction is not going to be the way in which humanity is led, then all there is and all there can be is inner authority, individual authority, what can you count on? You cannot count on some kind of communal support mechanism to give you the security that we've always had. It will be gone. And we will be living specifically at the beginning of this cycle in a deeply, deeply 6th line frame. This is where the mutative rave is going to emerge. This is its time to emerge.

Everything about the knowledge as it was given to me was for this purpose, to be able to lay a foundation for the future. I realize that everyone who meets Human Design as a conditioned adult not-self goes through an extraordinary ordeal to emerge on the other side of that. In that all of you have my deep empathy. But I know and have always known that it is what you can do for your children and your grandchildren is where you'll see the reward of your fractal now, because they will not have to be homogenized from birth. They will have the equipment that they need to not simply survive, but to thrive in their world.

The End of the Seven-Centered Life

It's not a bad world that's ahead, after all. There's no such thing. It's another one. It's a shifting, it's a changing, and the old will finally die out. And by the way, it's not the nine-centered old that's dying out. It's all this old seven-centered stuff that we're still carrying around—the seven-centered religions and the seven-centered vanities and all of those things that we're still lugging around with us. This is what's going to collapse finally. It didn't disappear in 1781, there were those born in 1780 that were still seven-centered who were going to live 60, 70, 80, 90 years nearly to the end of the 1800's. That the genius of the seven-centered, that its foundation for the sciences, that all of that we have simply been following the same patterns. They're the same patterns.

The true nine-centered being has never emerged. It's what we can be. It's what this knowledge brings, is a chance for you to live your nine-centered life, not a seven-centered life, but a nine-centered life. And to be able to live this life in a way that the seven-centered being was denied. They were denied. They did not have the knowledge. I don't care who you point to, I don't care what famous name you drag out of what era, what great teacher, master, guru, dog or sheep, I will tell you they did not know. And they did not live who they are. They lived their particular aspect of not-self and they lived a not-self purpose. And whether you think they are gods, sons of gods, saints or whatever, it is something so clear to understand that the seven-centered being, it was not possible.

It is only possible to live as yourself if you understand the mechanics of what you are. The long road of the tree of knowledge, branch after branch after branch until you finally get to the place where you get what you need to know. That you understand this process, that you begin to do something essential, that you begin to create distance between your personality and your design, that you begin to see that they are separate, that they do not need each other, that they do not, in essence, even recognize each other, and that they both have their unique process. And that those unique processes must be honored. And must be honored not simply so the vehicle can be correct, but transcendence is possible for the consciousness.

The Role Model: Divine Selfishness

This is not about hearing the word and enjoying the reverie. This is about getting the information and becoming the reverie. This is what a role model is. A role model is neither this nor that, because it is divinely selfish, because it can only operate in one way, as itself, no other way. How else do you become a model, and a model of what? A model of your unique purpose, this is what it's about.

In our process of going through the spiral of the transition of the color underneath, it is clear that when we are looking at the role model in this context, we're particularly looking at the 6/2, because obviously we're looking at personality roles. And it means that herein lies the potential of the true outer authority of the role model.

Remember something about the nature of divine selfishness. Divine selfishness is that you are never looking at anything for a particular reason. There is a huge detachment that is necessary in the role model denying conditioning. In other words, that no one and no thing—that's why the hermit is there. The easiest way to be yourself is to be alone. In many ways it is the place where you must begin. But then again, we can never avoid the other. And if you are a hermit it is imperative to recognize that there is a specific call for you. The role model is not an initiator. There is nothing worse, they are not. They need to be called. And they are not waiting for the call. They are not.

If you're a 6th line being in the first part of your life or the second part of your life, the call is everything, and you do wait. But when you're in mutation and you've entered into the process of living according to your own authority, there is no waiting. There is just a prana of your existence. We are talking about a role model mind, which means we're talking about a role model outer authority, an outer authority that offers nothing, because it is not interested in offering.

Everybody should look after themselves. The role model is aware of that. What the hell is their problem? Why can't they just look after themselves? And so many role models get dragged off, the fool on the hill, and down into the village and spend their life in the muck. That's not where they belong. It isn't. When you are lost and you are desperate you can approach a role model, because you can see that, unlike you, they are not confused about what to do. They are not uncomfortable in their skin. There is something about them that makes them deeply attractive. They are, after all, the most profound word-of-mouth marketers that have ever existed.

The Story of the Transition of the 5 and the 6

I used to tell that story, one of my favorite stories of illustrating the difference between this transition of the 5 and the 6. The crazy heretic comes into the village and tells the villagers that God told them that it's going to rain and it's not going to stop and they'd better build a boat, stuff like that. Of course, the villagers don't know what to do. Some of them think that the heretic is mad, the others think maybe God will do that, blah, blah, blah.

They go to the fool on the hill. They go up there to the 6 and say, what do you think? What the 6 says can either lead to the heretic being stoned to death or lead to the villagers all building an ark. That's the power that is there in the role model. That is a huge power.

Authority That Comes with Your Authority

It was interesting to me, I used to keep detailed records, what I called fractal links, looking at different people that were in my life at certain times. When I began in Design there were so many 6's in my life. There were just so many of them. This process of introducing Human Design and I was a heretic and they were all the fools on the hill. If they got it, anybody asking them would be moved, because that's their power. It is the power that comes out of their authority. Oh, there's nothing like authority. You hear it in my voice, my ten 1st lines, my 1st line in my profile, aside from all the things that have happened to me, just authority. There is this unbelievable authority that comes with your authority. It's fantastic. It really is the thing to grasp.

How powerful that is for the other. It freezes them, it numbs them, because they're not used to that. They're used to this wishy washy 'what do they think. Let's organize this together. Let's work it out. We'll work it out and I'll tell you what to do.' How different it is when that authority comes with its power. It's everything that we're moving towards in this life. None of these beings are real role models. I don't want to have to go through this whole litany again of disaster, because this is a being that doesn't operate correctly, that automatically is going to be in transference, that's going to lack the cognition that is underneath, that is going to end up just being so fragile if they get to their Kiron.

The 6's Bring in the New Age

But they don't get to express the truth of what they are, and this is what they're here for on this plane. They are dragging us all into the future and they're going to die if they're hypocrites. It's all the 6's that are bringing us into this age. They're the mechanism. It doesn't just happen. It's not like suddenly ok, there's Uranus. We've discovered Uranus, thank you Herschel, that's great—a new cycle. But something has to carry it, bring it into the flesh, and move it through the program. It's what the 6 does. Think of all those 6's that are Generators with their enveloping aura and their open aura dragging everybody in into this new time frame. It's how it works.

But we're not on trial, those of us who are not 6 profile. We're not. But the focus is on you. You enter into Design as a 6th line being you have to recognize that correctness is everything. It's absolutely everything. It's only in your inner authority that as a role model hermit that you're ever, ever, ever going to have an opportunity to deal with the right call and to express your gift. And whether it is a gift that is expressed through the details of the teacher or the gift of the guru to point out the key or the priest and they're rattling away and on and on and on, it is that outer authority in that perfect recognition of the call that has such a profound impact on the other and carries all the power of that authority.

In waking up the mind, in denying it its confused role of being inner authority and outer authority so that every time it opens up its mouth to speak to the other, it lies. You can get rid of that by taking away the inner authority job and then the outer authority can become something that is truly spectacular. That's what the mind is for. These role model roles, this is about expression of outer authority, role model authority based on what—that unique inner authority, whatever it happens to be.

The Role Model Martyr

The real story in spirals is that you begin to understand that everything turns on the 6's. The 6th line here is going to lead to the next 1st line. It's the way it goes. And in profile, when you get to the end and you get to the 6/3, the next step is the 1/3. And that you're always in this place of transition and here you're on the edge of the wheel with this martyr underneath. The role model that can truly grasp the plane, the hermit role models, that expression out of the role model mind, its outer authority, it is all about what you can do as the other that approaches it, the wisdom that can come from that unique authority.

But here is an understanding of the world. It's what the role model martyr is all about and it understands something that is deeply, deeply profound. The wheel keeps turning; there is nothing you can trust. There is nothing you can hold on to, so you'd better be unique because there is nothing you can trust. All 6/3's know that. They do, because they see the world. It's not about people. I'm not saying they don't trust people, they don't trust the world. They see that everything can go wrong, that every promise can be broken, that every pattern can dissolve, that every truth can crumble. This is their gift.

These are the ones that ultimately that can assure us that the fact that we stand on the threshold of a new age doesn't mean we need to be afraid. Humanity is lost in fear. This is the basis of the not-self. It is a sickness, a deep, deep sickness—fear. And it is a fear of life. It is a fear of the unknowable. It is a fear of change. We need these role models, because they are the ones that can show us that being in transition is like anything else. That if you're correct, that if you can operate out of what is your cognition, your intelligence, that it's all ok.

The Tree of Knowledge

The tree of knowledge is not some remote thing in a fantasy. It's each and every one of you; it's me. We are trees of knowledge in the most profound and mystical sense. We have no idea how profound that is until we allow it to express itself. It is our key. You stop determining with the mind, you begin to witness. The witness, ah, what it can see, what it can offer as outer authority. This is what it's all about. You do not have to worry about transition if your vehicle is running your life. It knows precisely what to do.

And when you're operating out of that basic cognition that the moment that your mind is not engaged in the insanity of trying to be the vehicle, remember my comment about distance between the personality and the design. The personality has a complex. It has an obsession. It's sort of a vehicular transvestite. It doesn't want to be a passenger—"I'm not a passenger, I'm a driver. I'm the vehicle." The insanity of that.

I look at all 6's, 6 lines, 6 colors, 6 tones, they're the mechanism. They're the ones that can bring the change into life. Not that they simply carry a new demarcation in the frame of our longevity, but they finally lead us out of the wilderness of being a seven-centered knockoff. And they lead us into the promised land of the new age, the so-called Age of Aquarius, that age in which we carry the wisdom on our own shoulders. And every once in a while we let others drink from that well, but in absolute correctness, in perfect divine selfishness. Teach it to your children; teach it to your grandchildren, divine selfishness. This is the only way.

There will be no one to help. It will not be in the frequency. And we have larger fish to fry. We have bringing to the surface the power of the right mind to begin to shift away from the dominance in human thought of the strategic mind that we have inherited from the seven-centered being. There is tremendous work to be done in education.

Knowledge is not power. It's just plain old-fashioned information. You never know what a being will do with information. For some everything is transformed. And for others, not much is happening. You can't expect the other to make this difference now. It's not the other that's going to make the difference in your life now. It's you, only you. If I look at all the 6's on the planet I can only see not-self. There is nothing else to see. And in that not-self lies all the madness. These are the ones that are the good that die young. These are the ones that have such difficulty trying to survive longevity in this changing age. They were just seven-centered knockoffs, that's what it is.

Keep it Simple: Strategy and Authority

Everything about the process now has to be kept very simple, and I mean that. It's a great dilemma for me in the work that I do, I teach at such depth and so much of it and I am so concerned about the surface. Strategy and Authority is an incredible gift. It is the bedrock of anything that is going to be possible for the well-being of any human being as they move forward. And to be reminded of something that no matter what level of the knowledge that one penetrates, that in the end the quality of your life, the beauty of your process will always be dependent on whether you follow your inner authority. It's the key.

And for all of these role models that are out there that are lost in transference that suffer the pain of role models—I see them all the time, these 6th line beings. I see them at their I return and they can't get rid of the 3rd line pessimism. They drag the pessimism through their whole roof phase. They never even get to the other side because the 3rd line theme can be so devastating if you're incorrect. The not-self is a plague for these role models.

So, next time you meet one remember if you can help them you help the future. You just do, because better than any example, any role model that operates out of their inner authority can be a more powerful example than any other configuration. It isn't necessarily a powerful example in the sense of huge audiences and blah, blah, and all this kind of stuff. It's not about that. It is about their impact in those moments in which their role model is called upon. And their expression of outer authority carries the power and the wisdom of a unique authority.

There is nothing like that. Then they truly live out the potential of what it is to be a role model. Not to be there to lead as one who stands before others, but one who leads others to stand alone. It's what it's about. The great struggle is to teach more and more human beings how to stand alone, and in standing alone discover their self love and at last, and truly, be open to the other.

Well, I started off funny, didn't end up funny, but so it goes. Anyway, to all of you, you take care. Enjoy the entertainment. Until next time, bye for now.

Lecture Eight

Angels and Demons

I've been looking forward to this one. It seems that my work particularly in this semester, well, in last semester as well, with both the DreamRave and Quarter by Quarter I'm beginning to finally be able to show the extent and the power of the program and the way in which the program holds us to the homogenized not-self way. As Cosmology, this is one of the classics. And it's the kind of thing that would be very shattering for most new agey types, particularly the angel lovers. If you ever want to really infuriate one of them you can hand them this recording.

I did this once before, but I did it in a very different way. I did it purely in a mystical way. I don't know if any of that is available anywhere. I have no idea, I don't know if I posted it anywhere or if it's been around. It was something I did in an Ibiza event years ago. But my approach in this within the context of what we have been looking at, looking at the various role configurations involving color is to give you another dimension of color and one that I find particularly tasty.

The Nature of Crystal Bundles

Let's get in here for a moment. In order to understand the context here, we have to understand the nature of crystal bundles. Again, it's something that was covered in detail in Rave Cosmology I which was the Bhan Tugh and there you get the most detailed information about the formation of the crystals of consciousness and the crystal bundles and so forth and so on. One of the things that we have is that we have this fundamental binary, we have the personality crystals and the personality crystals operate within the atmosphere around the planet. There are 16 original crystal bundles, something that is examined in the faces of the godhead which is the Quarter by Quarter program. Basically they represent every four hexagrams in the wheel. And in that sense, the personality crystal consciousness bundles imprint and impact the consciousness field as a whole. And particularly what we think of as mind or personality consciousness.

And then there is the design crystal bundle which is a single formation, which is within the mantle of the earth. And obviously here this is where the design crystals for all of the form principles of the planet emerge. And of course, we're talking about numbers that are beyond most human beings imagination even to think of because we're talking about vast, vast numbers.

For most of our history, that is, for most of what was the seven-centered history that in terms of what we would call pure human, something that lasted approximately 85,000 years, for most of that the rituals that were associated with death rarely involved the immediate disposal of a body. And the majority of those that died, the majority of them continually had an opportunity to return to the bundle. At the point of biological death the design crystal and the magnetic monopole link up. The design crystal is pulled down, in essence, by the magnetic monopole to the G center through the central individual mutative channel, and then the two of them literally leave the body. They go straight down through the center, through the 60. There is a kind of invisible doorway opposite the 60th gate, in a sense, where the design crystal and the personality leave the form.

In leaving the form, the personality crystal is abandoned, literally abandoned. The design and the monopole have a deep, deep connection to each other, a connection in which being together is much more, if I could describe it that way, again, I'm anthropomorphizing, much more satisfying than being apart. There is a great tension for design and monopole in being apart.

So, the moment they come together they leave the body and they abandon the personality. The personality crystal has to wait. It literally has to wait. And it has to wait for a rotation that ultimately will come along and pick it up some time from the moment of death for 72 hours, some time in that time frame that personality crystal will be picked up and returned to its bundle. By the way, when I say that it sort of sounds like a taxi pulling up. It isn't. It is basically frequency and magnetism.

Anyway, the personality crystal needs that time. Everything about understanding the rave concept of The Book of the Dead is the recognition that the most important thing the living can do for the dead is to protect their body after death for three days. This will provide them with an opportunity to return to source.

Religious Laws of Immediate Burial

We have a problem, though. And it is a considerable problem. And when I say it's a problem I don't mean that there is a solution either, in that sense, it is just simply a phenomena. And the phenomena is that somewhere around 2,000 years ago a number of things began to happen. That is, the foundation of what would be very powerful religions and the extreme expansion of population that was taking place in what were very, very warm climates, particularly in India and the Middle East. The byproduct of that was that the obvious dilemma of a rotting body in the heat. And a rotting body in the heat is something that is very unpleasant and can be a disease carrier and all of these various things. It's not a very pleasant thing. It produces quite an aroma.

So, this coincidence, in a sense, of one of the earliest population explosions, at the same time as the development of what would be pervasive religious thought that built into the laws of those religions because of their locality was this imperative to immediately dispose of the body. You get to see that, for example, just about every day in the news. Something happens in Iraq to civilians and almost immediately everybody is off to the graveyard. And it is simply something to understand whether one is—this is true of the Jewish tradition as well—that the body needs to be buried within 24 hours, the cremation that takes place in terms of Hinduism, and so forth and so on.

Now, there is a devastating byproduct to that which is that experienced souls, in a sense, personality crystals that have gone through many form experiences suddenly emerge in this particular epoch only to be denied the return to the bundle. And of course, out of that comes something. The crystal bundles are fascinating, and again, I'm not trying to be a salesman for Quarter by Quarter but once it ends and it will be posted in the self-study, for me it is the seminal course in understanding personality consciousness programming in the godhead. It really brings a deep insight to how deeply we are programmed, continued to be programmed by the prime personality crystal bundles.

However, there is something else at work. What is at work is all of these personality crystals that were simply cremated or interned immediately after death. And of course, these personality crystals never get the opportunity to be picked up, never get their Bardo experience. But they are loose, if I can put it that way. They're loose; they are in the environment.

The Natural Bardo

The whole thing about the personality crystal is the personality crystal needs to be able to go through its natural Bardo. There is a natural Bardo. The natural Bardo is based on the decomposing of the brain, literally. The personality crystal is able to access certain capacities of the brain long after biological death. And that is something that is functional for over 72 hours. So the personality crystal needs the vehicle and needs the vehicle to be untouched. It needs the vehicle as a tool for its Bardo experience. It's only through that, that it actually gets to the frequency in which it can be recognized and returned to the bundle.

So, without that, with the damage being done to the body or autopsies or all of these things, that these personality crystals that are loose, they end up aggregating. That is, in the same way that the way in which the earth was probably created was by lumps of material slowly grouping together, and out of developing a density bringing more and more of it together. Basically what you have with these personality crystals that don't return to the bundle is that sooner or later they connect with other personality crystals that have not returned to the bundle.

Rogue Bundles

Now, we're dealing with sizes that are very different. The main personality bundles have hundreds of millions of crystals. We're talking about a density of consciousness potential. Whereas, these rogue crystals, because there really is no other way to describe them, are very different. First of all, they have very limited impact. In Quarter by Quarter I talk about how the crystal bundles deeply impact our personality consciousness, deeply programming us, in that sense. Here you have something entirely different. It doesn't have that same kind of reach; it doesn't have that same kind of power so its power tends to be limited to individuals. This is perhaps the thing that is so fascinating about them, because it's all the things that all the crazies and the new agey and the UFO nicks and the "this and that's" are always blabbing about and have no idea what they are.

There are angels, demons, ghost, gods, entities and aliens. By the way those gods are all minor deities. They do exist. And they exist as these rogue bundles, some of them with maybe 10,000 crystals, some of them with maybe a couple of million crystals. It is not like they are—the numbers are still impressive, if you know what I mean. After all, you have a vast slice of the population in which the personality crystals never get a chance to return to the bundles. So ultimately these bundles have been developing in strength for thousands of years.

The thing that is so interesting for me about all of this is that many of these things, the demons, the entities, the angels, are in the scriptures of these religions that created them. And I think that that is so delicious. The religions created them. Before Judeo-Christian Islamic thought there were no demons and angels, so to speak. They were created. They were created out of those very beings through their death. And they started to emerge really in a hurry.

It's so interesting, this battle against the "devil," and to understand that this construct is hilarious. It literally is out of us. I remember intellectuals saying that man created God and all that stuff, that at some point in my youth I fell for and after meeting the Voice, you forget all that stuff very quickly. But nonetheless, it really is so in the most delicious way. That is, I don't mean to offend anybody, but then again, that's what heretics do. There may be demons running around in which the crystals are from the original founders of some of the world's most important religions. It's really kind of cute, I think; but perhaps that's just my sense of humor.

So what are these things? I sense them all the time. I just do. I remember when—I think it was the second or third Ibiza event, they were in the same hotel—there was this bundle that was there. I don't often get into this kind of stuff because it's fishy, but I have three open motors and I'm a personality that is very detached so I take in a tremendous amount of background information and I can feel the presence of these things. I don't often know which kind of bundle they happen to be unless it impacts me. In other words, unless I have a direct connection to it, usually they're looking for some student of mine. They're always looking for someone, in that sense.

Rogue Bundles are Attracted to Our Motivation

So, we have these things. And these variations in them are—the names, angels, demons, ghosts—it's the way we experience them through color. These things are attracted to our motivation. Think about that. This has nothing to do with your body; it's not about your vehicle. This is not design stuff. It's strictly personality. And they are attached to motivation. Frankly, that is not something where I can answer why. I don't know. It's just what I was told. But they are attracted to motivation, which means that they are attracted to the particular color.

I don't think that these bundles are particularly different from each other. For example, I think a bundle that one person can experience as an angel can be experienced by somebody else as a demon. I don't really think that there is any difference in the composition of those bundles. In other words, that there is sort of an angel crystal quality, if you know what I mean. Or a demon crystal quality or a ghost crystal quality, I don't think that's so. I think that these bundles are just bundles. And I think that the way in which it operates is that we give it its value. We anthropomorphize it, after all. It's like me saying that I got the knowledge from a voice. That's me anthropomorphizing. It really is.

We call things names, we give things names, and we try to put them in a framework. I experience the Voice as a voice. I don't even know if I actually heard anything, if you know what I mean. I don't know if the Voice actually spoke to me, is what I'm saying. In other words, the fact that I experienced it acoustically, I'm a pure individual, I'm a musician, the acoustic sensitivity in me is very deep. I assume that I was just translating a frequency in the only way I could which was a sound I heard in my own head. In other words, this is the way these things work. We make it up, in that sense, in order to handle it.

The 1st Color: Angel

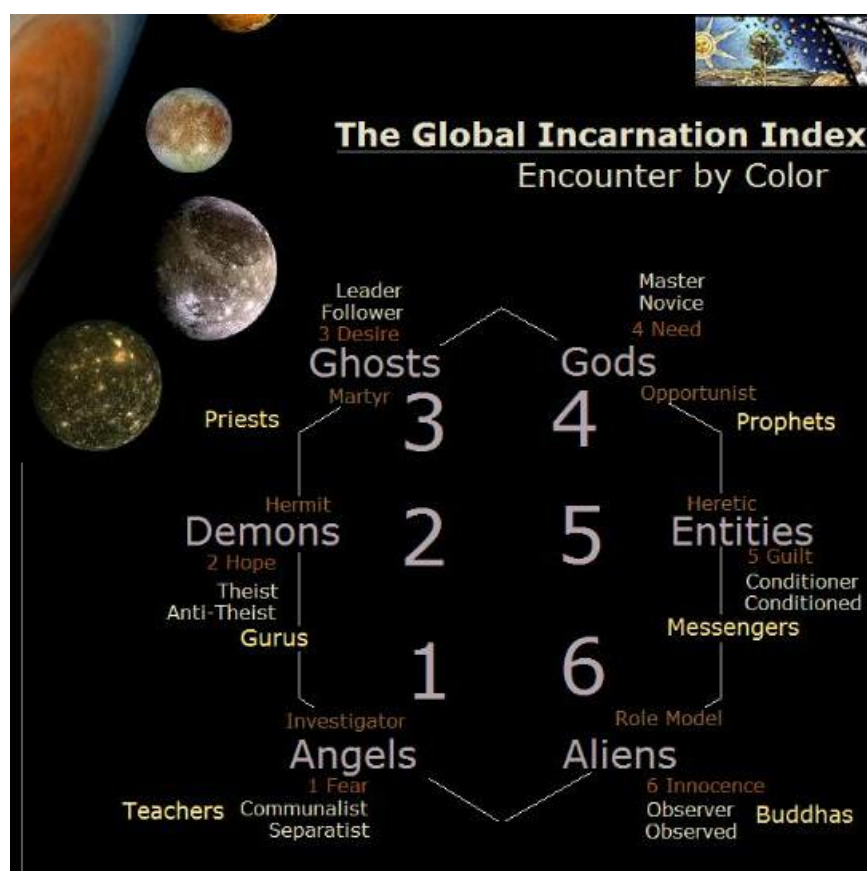

It is obvious that my experience for me was trying—I think that the Voice, whatever it was, had to step down its frequency enormously in order for me to have a sense of, oh, this is the Voice. Basically this is what we do. So, for example, if you're somebody that has a 1st color—now, please understand something about this. Right now I'm not talking about transference and everyone is in transference. You're not going to have these encounters if you're in transference. What you're going to get is a real problem, and I'll explain that.

RAVE COSMOLOGY VI: Profile, Purpose and Function

A Digital Book for Students

The thing to understand is right here, now, I'm just going to speak theoretically. If you're a 1st color being, your motivation is something that if you encounter one of these bundles you will naturally assume that they're an angel or angelic or that quality. In other words, this is the way in which you can step down the frequency and interpret it if you're 1st color being, because that's the way it works. It's not so much that that thing you're connecting to is in fact an angel. I want to be very clear that these constructs have emerged out of the way in which we deconstruct the frequency or take in the lowest level of that frequency.

At the same time, there may be a certain quality to that. For me it's clear that it's coming from the motivation itself and this is what these things are interested in. Now, if I tell you the truth, the truth is they are not interested in anything other than transferred frequencies because it's only the transferred frequencies that because they lack cognition are the ones most deeply impacted not necessarily in the positive sense, but deeply impacted by the potential of encounter, because they really don't get to have the essential communication because that is what encounter is about.

That is, think about what these are. These are personality crystal bundles; they're small ones, relatively speaking. They want to be like the big boys. They don't know any different. It's not like they know that they are a minor bundle and that they are the byproduct of this change in the program. They don't know any of that. They are just simply a bundle filtering the neutrino ocean. And they have a quality that allows them to hone in, if you will. And what they hone in on is that motivational frequency. This is where they get in there.

You get your angels; the angels are here to guide you to the truth. That's what angels are actually for. They're here to help you get through your fear. Now, of course, that would be the communication if you were dealing with it as true self. But of course, the people that meet angels or can meet angels who are in transference who are acting out on the 4th color, they don't get it at all. These are people that think that they talk to God, and they didn't. Not only did they not talk to God, but oh boy are they going to be given information that is just going to disturb them.

And of course, so much of our understanding of these forces, because they are consciousness forces, is directly attributable to the fact that the vast majority of humanity is not-self. This is what these bundles are connected to. This is where they have their impact. And boy, do they ever. And you see what happens to people who say to you, I've seen an angel, or I've seen demons, or I've seen ghosts. You know what happens to these people, they become obsessed. It becomes their whole trip.

And it doesn't matter whether there was anything to be learned or gained, because nothing is, they simply become obsessed with the fact that there is encounter. And of course, they don't get the right information. And everybody else who looks at them thinks that they're slightly off. This is the program. These forces are part and parcel of this whole way in which the homogenized belief systems and the homogenized fear of the forces and all of these things are maintained.

But for the not-self to have such an encounter, they're going to be in trouble. It's going to end up plaguing them. I have met many of these people. And whether or not they are expressing truth or not or whether they are embellishing or not, whatever the case may be their assumption is that they've actually met an alien or ghost or whatever. And this is the work of the program. And it locks them to that motivation. That is, it locks them to the transference because they want it again.

As a matter of fact, most new age people are looking for this. Any one of these, they're looking for it, which means that they are in a way being seduced to transference because this is where the way in which the experience of this phenomenon is most deeply felt. If your personality is awake and you have an encounter, it's a rarity. And it's a rarity in the sense that it will serve you and not the bundle. My encounter with the Voice did not serve the Voice. I'm not capable of providing anything in return.

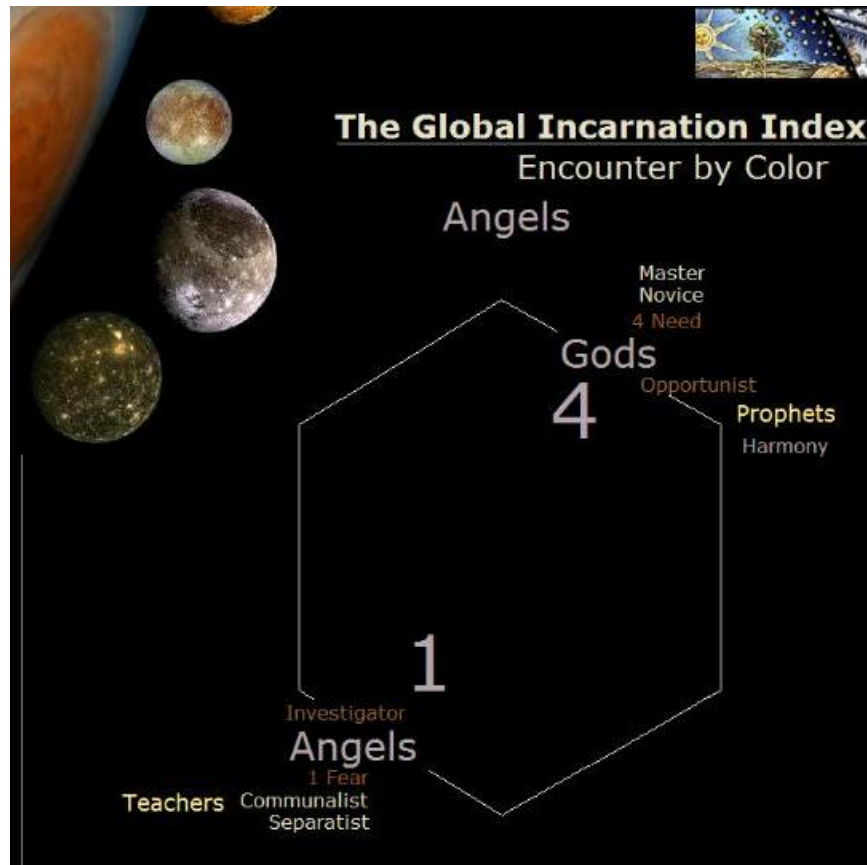

I simply got the incredible advantage of the knowledge. True encounter is about information, nothing else. And of course, the not-self transferred encounter is full of all kinds of distorted information. So we have all kinds of myths about what these things are. And we have all kinds of people telling us about their conversations with them, their channeling of them, their "this and that," and it is all disinformation.

The 1st Color: Fear

So, let's take a little look. Fear is the 1st color. Like all firsts, like all foundations it is about being motivated to establish what is secure. That's what it's about. Everything about being motivated by the 1st color is being driven to be secure. It is the key.

The encounter that could be correct in this case, that is, the angel bundle being attracted to the motivation of pure fear, in that could lie fascinating information, information to be able to deal with that fear. But that's not the way it works. The way it works is that you've got somebody who is a 4th color and they are transferred to the 1st color and they're putting out this frequency that is attracting these bundles. And of course, they are not capable of getting the correct information. They don't. These are the ones that are looking for the angel to save them. These are the ones that are lost in the possibility that they can be saved by the angel and the angel bundle plays the game.

All these people that think they have their angel that's watching over them, are they getting screwed. Yeah, sure the angel is watching over them, the way the guard in the jailhouse is looking after the prisoner. And of course, the illusion is, because this is the way we take it in, this is the flavor that we take in and we take it in without the cognition. And there is that force, that shiny force. And it's going to hold you to your folly, because they have no idea what it is.

Color is a Poison for the Personality

Color is a poison for the personality. It's what stands between the transcendence of the personality, this transference, how easy it is for the personality to be in transference. How easy it is for the nearly seven billion people on the planet to be in transference. These people are not equipped. This is not their encounter. And so it becomes a manipulation. These are not forces that are protecting them. These are forces that are holding them.

And instead of getting the knowledge, the teaching that is there and the teaching can be so profound, instead of that, instead of that pure motivation that receives the pure information, it's just frequency. It's not like you have to see them. If you're operating correctly it is an inspiring force. Not everybody can feel their presence, but they're there. They're all around us in this world. And they love to latch on to those that are deep in their transference and plague them, because they do.

I think these bundles are very surprised when they are noticed, noticed in the sense that they are noticed before they do anything. When I say "do anything," think about it this way. There you are in your design and there you are with your aura and here is that tiny little bundle, because they are tiny regardless of how many millions are in them, and the moment this thing enters inside of your aura, there is a frequency relationship. It's there. The more sensitive you are, the more aware you are of these things. I rarely notice them in terms of my aura. I'm a Manifestor, I have a repelling aura. I simply notice the difference in the frequency. I can feel, literally, the frequency space around me change.

But this is how they impact us. You can have them hanging into your aura for a lifetime. The more obsessed that the not-self becomes with this, the more lost they are. Let's put it another way. The program doesn't want the human family to understand that they have been locked in this vast game for so long. They really don't. This is a way of making sure, in a sense, of not allowing human beings to deny transcendent forces, and at the same time be subservient to them, to bow to them. After all, the major religions on this planet are the greatest ambassadors that the homogenized program has in terms of maintaining the homogenization of thought and morality and behavior. This is the way in which we are all controlled.

The 4th Color: God

If you're somebody that has the 1st color you transfer over here. And of course, the moment that you transfer over here, all this God/Prophet business, you don't get any of that, because it's not your encounter. What you end up with is an obsession about God or prophecy. In the new age these are the people that think that Nostradamus is the bee's knees, or whatever. These are the ones that get totally obsessed with the prophecies. They see prophetic signs in everything. They eventually get put in an institution because they see them in license plates all the time.

And I don't mean to be cruel, but I really want to say that if you're not-self and you have an encounter the fact is that there is something about you that there is something significant there. It's just like in dream where I try to explain that the way you're programmed during sleep is to maintain your weaknesses when you're awake. The moment that there is an encounter with the not-self this encounter is there to make sure that that particular not-self never stops being not-self. So you get lost. It's so easy for the not-self to get lost. There are so many—prophecy—wow, there are people hooked on prophecy. That's what this is.

This is where all these obsessions lie. And in those obsessions is this layer upon layer upon layer of anthropomorphization of creating this archetype that is immediately accepted as that archetype. You notice that people meet the same angels all the time. Have you ever noticed about aliens how they all in the drawings that people make, they all look the same. It's not like they look human. They all look the same. They all have these sort of funny long shaped faces and long necks, they all look the same. Through the anthropomorphization you get this archetype that is established.

Transference is something that for the personality this is the greatest challenge of all. You can see how distorted our relationship is to the forces. I understand something very basic about the forces. Obviously, they are something that is clear to me are different. Are different in the sense that the construct is obviously different, the way in which it functions is different. That it is not something that one can ever truly grasp. And yet, at the same time, it is clear that the forces have always attempted to interact with our consciousness field. I know that obviously from my own experience.

So you have this vast array of crystal bundles, all these personality crystal bundles and they're all trying to have an influence because that's what personality crystals try to do, they try to influence the consciousness field. And what you get out of that is that those beings that will have a natural connection to the forces never get the encounter that could be transforming for them, and end up with in their psychological programming this drive that can lead to obsessiveness.

I've seen a lot in my years in this work and I spent many, many years touring and doing free introductory lectures. And in the early years I would talk to people afterwards. I was in Berlin and I could see this guy already in the audience, I could see from the distance the madness in his eyes. You could see it. And I knew I was going to have to deal with this one. The moment the lecture was over I see him moving towards me with this kind of portfolio, an artist portfolio that he was carrying. And behind him was his girlfriend, very sweet the way she would sort of look at me and sort of plead with me to indulge him, it was very sweet.

He said to me that he had to show me something, and I said, ok. He opens up this portfolio and he takes out a Mariner 2 photograph of the surface of Mars. He lays it on the table. He says to me, do you see the statue of Jesus? I go no, I don't. He describes some other things that were there. I did not see them. When the forces get you and you're not ready, the last thing on earth you ever want is an encounter. The madhouses are filled with these people; people I've known who were burnt, literally fried, by these encounters.

If you're not correct, this is something that can be really cruel. And of course, it becomes a plague in the consciousness, literally, because of the transference, so that there is no true connection with the forces. There is no true exchange, in that sense. There is a potential in these crystals, obviously these bundles are filtering agents, like all personality crystal function. There is something to be garnered from that; can be.

The Crystal Bundles are Attracted to Non-Cognitive Motivation

But this is not the way in which—it does not work according to the ideal. These crystals bundles take advantage of the fact that humanity is in transference and they are attracted to the non-cognitive motivation, because they can manipulate it. They don't have the power to manipulate our consciousness the way the primary personality bundles do. They don't have the power to rule the life the way the design crystal bundle does. But they can deeply manipulate a single personality. And they can only manipulate a single personality that's in transference.

This is how they get you. And boy do they get you. And it's hard to shake them, because they don't let go. They stay around you. Once they've got you they stay around, they feed on it. It's their power trip. You become their universe, you become their programming field. You can cleanse that.

Written comment: [unknown]

Ra: Rather intrusive, I like that, Inga. Yes, it's rather intrusive. It can be very intrusive.

One Way to Deal with the Manipulation

There is only one way to deal with that. You have to be outside of the trap of transference. This is where the personality can suffer. If you are somebody where encounter is part of what is possible for you, if you don't get rid of the transference then you can end up with one of these experiences that sidetrack your life. And they do. You look at these people that have had these kinds of experiences and what you get to see is that it simply sidetracks their life; gone. The program is happy. And most of them are ready to give all authority to those forces, any authority to those forces because they have none themselves and never did.

When you look at the world, this plane through mechanics, you get to see it turns everything upside down, literally. Why does the program want us to be lost?—because the future is not selfhood. The future is not about unique expression of awareness. The future is rave. The future is the giving up of self. The future is the emergence of conscious penta. Homogenization leads naturally to that, like sheep to the slaughter. And why are we teaching selfhood? That's cute, because we can. Bless the Voice, we can, that's all. And it's only for a few, as a percentage of the totality; it's only for a few.

After all, if you go through an evolutionary process you've got a right in the end to see what it's really about. That's what it is. I see myself very clearly as an approaching anachronism. To be human is something that is going out the window. It has been a horror trip for millennia for most of humanity always in every era. And the fact is that despite the fact that the evolutionary process is superb in the way in which it's all orchestrated and I understand where it's all going, because one day it's going towards the homogenization of a biverse, of a consciousness that's so vast that it's hard to imagine. I don't stand in the way of such an extraordinary thing. This is where it all goes.

But it's built on stages. And this human stage is coming to an end. The voice, after all it comes from the design. The design says, I want to show you how fantastic a machine you actually have, because the personality has been fucking you around for thousands of years and you have no idea how incredible this thing is. This is what it's about. And I'm really sorry that your model line is coming to an end, but you did a terrific job. We're going to get nice rave babies out of you. You managed to get us to a nine-centered transitional BodyGraph, good for you, thank you very much.

And here, to those of you that are really nice, we're going to give you a treat, we're going to let you see how wonderful it is to be in form. This is the gift. And I know it's an extraordinary gift. It's beyond words. It doesn't matter to me whether the vast majority of the planet is always going to be not-self and goes to hell in a hand basket. I am not the messiah. Nothing is going to save them. Nothing ever did save them. Most of them are first time in/first time out. It's just genetic differentiated potential. We need the proper genetic mix in order to get to the mutation of rave.

What I see in this is the grace. There's grace in allowing this knowledge to emerge. It's here. We all know that anybody anywhere, in a sense, could access it. We also know that's not the way. It isn't. I don't know if it's a reward in the purest sense of that word. What I do know is that I'm glad that there is such a possibility, because I know how different it is to see the world from this perspective and what my life looked like when I saw it through the eyes of the not-self.

Human Design Limited to Certain Fractals

This is something that is the magic that is available. It's why I have always—the development of Human Design, people were always saying to me that it has to get bigger and bigger and faster and faster and I was never interested. Human Design for me is something that is deeply elitist. And it's not elitist in the traditional sense of it's not about this or that, it's elitist in the sense that it is truly limited to fractals. It is limited to a certain possibility on this plane. There are only certain number of beings on this plane—I've talked about it, somewhere between 30 and 50 million out of seven billion are close enough on fractal lines to the source of this knowledge to actually have access to it.

And my assumption is it's always been like that. I don't think it's been any different. We talk about the glory of Greece and we're talking about seven guys. I think it's always been that way. I don't think it's ever been different. There has always been these cabals, these groups, the history of mysticism is full of these things. The only difference we have today is that because of the vast population expansion in a world where there were only 100 million people, there may have been only 40 or 50 people who could possibly be adepts. Today with billions and billions and billions we get up to 30 or 40 million, who knows. It's less than a percentage. It is like looking at the body and seeing that you've got X number of brain cells and then the rest of it is meat—tens of trillions and whatever. It's just the way that it is.

So, what I do in my relationship to you is that I ensure that you see the world the way it can be seen. It is a duality, after all. To see through the veil, to see through that sky, to look on the other side and to see these things for what they really are and to understand what is happening to people when they have these kinds of experiences and they are not correct. And they're not. And their assumption in those encounters, is that they are somehow special, holy, unique, all of those things. Don't follow them down any path; I tell you.

I want you to understand your privilege, for yourself, not in relationship to me or the knowledge, but in terms of what the knowledge is for you. To understand that it's not because of any reason that you can come up with, it isn't. Your connection to access to this knowledge happened a long, long time ago. These are just things that are always in motion. And it's about seeing something else. It's about understanding what I feel for you or towards you in understanding in turn what you need to feel for those that are there for you. You are the only doorway, as I am the only doorway for you. You are the only doorway for them.

And you see, there is not a lot of room, if you know what I mean. And it means that those beings that are there in your life, you have to do what you can for them. If it doesn't work, it doesn't work. Not everybody is ready, not everybody can be. But this privilege that we share, that many share now, what is so important is that we're careful in the way that we look at others, that they're not just clients or students or earnings or whatever. That you really see that those that are there for the knowledge from you at any level, whether you casually mention something or whether you work with them, they've always been waiting for you so that they can get out of the trap. So that they can get out of the weight and burden of what it is to live in this homogenized world.

The Homogenized World: A Lie

What it is to live in a world where just about everybody that you encounter is a lie. It doesn't matter whether they present themselves as "this or that," whether you experience them as being harmless or not. Their whole life is a lie. Everything about them that could distinguish them and bring grace into their life has been bargained away, lost to the conditioning forces. And where you see the program at its most vicious is where it attacks those beings that have potential fractal connections. The people that meet these angels, demons, whatever it is, these are actually ones that may show up on your radar and oh, boy do the forces like to get to them first to pull them away, to lock them into the mindless obsession, to take them away from truth, their truth, the only truth.

It's a vicious maia, folks, if you're unaware. I watch every day. I'm a news junkie. I watch the world. And the world is mad. It really is; absolutely insane. Doctors driving themselves into airports to explode; it's an insane world, really, absolutely mad at just about every level. It's to a point where at some times I just start laughing. I'm glad nobody's around because they'd think I was really nuts, because after awhile it's just so insane. This is our world.

Think about the billions and billions of people that are caught in mindless rituals that are—(written remark)—Ra laughing—I spent time with my fish and my dog and my cats, yeah, it's true. It's the thing about breaking through the sky. This is one of the things I think that needs to be understood about what it is to have a true mystical awakening is that there is no more bullshit. What's the point? It is what it is. See it for what it is and remember what that means for you in your life. You have to be so careful about the life you live and the beings in that life. And at the same time being so clear that those forces in your life that cannot grasp what you have to offer and what you must live, hey, show them the door. There are not a lot of us. And we need to be able to have the correctness in our life to make sure that those that have a chance get their chance.

Human Design has grown because of you and others like you. It's what brought it the success it has. What is concerning to me is there are so many beings showing up now and how important it is for them to get it straight right away. I had a question the other night about somebody talking about a client who made some grand statement about their awareness and tries to reject something in a reading, send them away. Don't waste your time on people that aren't ready. It's just a waste of time.

Trust Your Aura

You have to live by your aura, trust your aura. If you trust your aura you'll see it all works. You will get the right forces coming your way and you'll be able to make the kind of decision that works.

Anyway, at this point in my work I have come to a place where I find seeing the program in such detail to be disturbing; I do. I try to shake it afterwards and not really carry that around with me because it makes it impossible to empathize with the nature of the world. And to empathize with those that, in fact, don't have our privilege and ultimately may need our help, because it can be very painful to see how long and how deep the wool has been over our eyes.

Ok folks, what to say; you take care and until next time, bye for now.

Rogue Crystal Bundles

It's interesting about last week. When I considered what I was going to tell you last week and it was really bizarre that experience of being suddenly disconnected for no reason, my computer actually shutting down my microphone, which it has never done. It actually turned it off. There was an off switch on it. It was really bizarre. On top of that when I switched over to my backup computer, I don't use it very often and I'm not familiar with the plugging so in my attempt to switch over to the other computer I plugged it in the wrong place. Literally five minutes after I said that I was canceling the class I was back in the classroom. It was a very funny moment. So, I guess the forces have chewed this one over and they're going to let me do my number today. We'll see, anyway.

Rogue Crystal Bundles

So, I think there is a misunderstanding, I do. And I think the misunderstanding is that the impression is that there are six kinds of rogue crystal bundles—angel bundles and demon bundles and ghost bundles and God bundles and alien and entity bundles—that there is all these six different bundles. Well, there aren't. There are rogue crystal bundles; that is clear. But they are no specific type. It's not like you're picked up specifically for the demon crew or the ghost crew or the God crew, this is all about us. It has nothing to do with these crystal bundles. It's about us, and it's about the way in which projection operates.

Remember that whenever we are connected to what we would call the forces, in that sense, that connection is experienced within us. It is experienced within our construct no matter how we perceive it, whether it is a profoundly delightful visual hallucination, if it is an acoustic arrival, if it is the wish of non-existent breath past the back of your neck, whatever the hell it may be, it is all within us and we, in essence, construct it all.

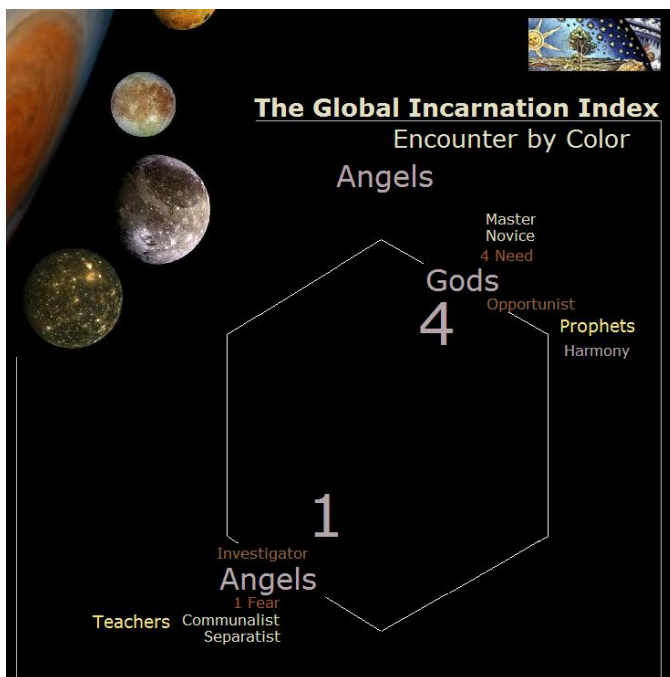

After all, what are these bundles? They aren't doing anything. And when I say they're not doing anything what I really mean is that they have no capacity to do anything. This is not a life force, this is not a hardware/software combination, it isn't. It has nothing to do with it. It's like the crystals that we're endowed with. It's just that they're not in a vehicle. There is no body, there is no hardware, there is no brain, there is no anything. There is simply the relative quantum mechanics of them being grouped together. And in their being grouped together they interact with a specific frequency.

The Bundles are Attracted to Frequencies

The thing that distinguishes these bundles is their attractiveness to a frequency. And it's through this attractiveness that we give them the qualities that are inherent in these names. I don't know if you get that, but as we move along I will reinforce this so you can grasp this. Any bundle, any one of these bundles, any one of these rogues can be any one of these things. It's not the bundle itself that is this or that. The fact is, though, that the bundle acts out in only one way, because as I said, these bundles have an attraction frequency.

One of the things that fascinates me because I was not told is whether there is a majority, for example, of certain bundles that tune into one frequency, and are the others a minority. For example, what I've taught you so far is that the bundles interact with our motivation. That's the hook. And of course because motivation is in transference because we are dealing with color then the way in which we distinguish the values of these things is relative to a lack of cognition, obviously, in the way in which the not-self is going to react.

But the thing to recognize is that this bundle over here is attracted to what would be a 1st color frequency. It is simply attracted to 1st color frequency. And of course, what it gets is that it gets 4th color beings who are transferred to the 1. And this is the relationship. And the concept of angel, wherever you go, how deep you go, no matter what formulas you use to define it, that this concept of angel is derived from 4th color transference and the way in which it integrates with the filtering process of these bundles.

Think about what they are, in essence. The moment that one of these bundles is in your aura—

I want you to imagine something. There is not enough rogue bundles for every single human being on the planet. This is not the way that it works. There may, in fact, be millions of them. And millions of them that can be very large in number terms, in terms of their content. But the fact of the matter is that there is not enough of them for everyone and not everyone gets to interact with such forces.

And their limitation is that they can only have any kind of effect, and remember, they are not conscious, they are not aware, they do not know what they are; they are simply an element in the program.

Everything about Human Design is that on one side it appreciates the creativity and the art of mythology. But on the other side this is mechanical knowledge. And it strips away all of the hyperbole and the mythology that's layered on top to just simply see mechanisms at work. Now, I wouldn't say that they are blind mechanisms because they are mechanism within the orchestration of the whole process. But it's something to recognize that this rogue bundle that happens to be attracted to the number 1 frequency doesn't know it's attracted to that. It doesn't.

A Powerful Personality Conditioning Program

But the thing that is so interesting about these bundles is that they have impact if they can enter or meet your aura. And basically what you get is a very powerful personality conditioning program. In other words, the neutrino stream that is going through this bundle and this bundle being in your aura, you're going to get impacted by that. Again, the way we construct the maia is that the maia is built on our acceptance of concepts. And acceptance of a concept, by the way, can also be the rejection of a concept, but the concept exists.

It is this entering into or meeting the aura, and you notice I say meeting the aura because there are different variations on these themes dependent on your type. It's not just a matter that your color, that is, whether you're transferred or it's your true color that is going to attract these forces. The fact of the matter is that your sensitivity to these forces is what actually increases. And what you're always going to meet is that you're either going to meet what is there for you in terms of your transference, or you're going to meet the possibility of what is there for you if you are correct.

The reality is that what you're getting is that you're getting a blast of conditioning and you don't know how to handle it. I know this from my experience with the Voice. That's an anthropomorphization. I don't know if there was really a voice. How can I say that? I don't know. I was all alone and I experienced a phenomena and it is clear to me that the only way that I could translate what was happening to me was that it had to be translated within the context of what I am and what I am capable of. There would be no other way, it's not possible.

My experience of what I might call, and I have to be very humble in this, the personality of what I met, I could easily deconstruct that with pop magazine psychology. Here I was this deeply arrogant, very intelligent Manifestor who didn't believe in anything and trust anything and I get the experience with the Voice that had a voice that would make trees bow down. How do I know that that is the Voice? I don't. How do I know that is its personality quality? I honestly don't know, I cannot project that on—what was clear to me was in my understanding the design crystal bundle it has no personality. It only has the personality that can be projected through us in any kind of encounter. We project the personality of angel, demon, ghost, God, entities and alien, we project that and we project it out of not-self because the planet is not-self.

So these bundles, which are simply mechanical graveyards for personality crystals, because that's what they are, in a sense, a graveyard isn't a nice way of describing it; however, the sense that this is a dead end. You go into a rogue bundle; you go into a dead end. You're going to be in that bundle until the end of the process and whether or not you get anywhere beyond that is unlikely. So, the rogue bundle isn't exactly a thing that one would aspire to.

The fact is that it is simply a mechanism. What is interesting is that as the number of these mechanisms has increased the power of the not-self interpretation of these forces. And not simply the power of it, but the fact that in our maia we now have a deeply constructed understanding of what these forces are. In other words, when you talk angel, everybody gets a picture. When you talk demon everybody gets a picture. And of course, none of that is true. That's the thing that's interesting. These are not bad beings, as an example, the demon ones, or whatever. These are not holy people, the angel ones, as an example. It has nothing to do with that. These are bundles that by their very physics, because it's the physics, have an attraction to a specific frequency because everything is related to frequency.

But it isn't like they are that. That's the thing that's so interesting to grasp. Of course, the way we experience it is another story. The way we experience it is that we don't know how to codify it. And we have in our mind system all kinds of "what if" scenarios that we have been read stories as children, seen things in television, film, books, you name it, all of these things that over and over again seem part of our culture.

We Make Up Our World

I am interested in stripping away the drama for a moment. I have no problem with the drama. I have met demons. The drama can be fantastic. You can really assume for a moment that there they are, look at them. But I made it up. That's what we do every day when you wake up, you make up the world. It's what you do; you make it up from your memory. And your memory includes the mythologies, the neo-mythologies, and the pop culture mythologies, all of those things. When you wake in the morning you wake up into your maia. It's how we maintain the illusion.

It would be very uncomfortable to really come to grips with why you need an angel, if you need one at all. It isn't to say that the encounter, in and of itself, is not of value. It is. But it's as much a value as any true interaction with anything in any way. It is a way for human beings to put their head through the sky. The maia can be deeply banal. It can be obsessed with the most tiresome and brutal aspects of life on the mundane plane.

The thing to recognize is that if there is going to be an understanding of what these rogue bundles really are, and after all it is accumulated personality consciousness experience that is in those rogue bundles that is filtering the neutrino ocean, that is by its very design only capable of impacting one being at a time. Obviously, if you're not correct, if you're operating according to the not-self, if the frequency that you're putting out is attracting a force that is not natural for you, then of course, you're going to run into trouble.

Most of the beings that have encounter—most of them, I'm not saying all of them, but most of them—society is very uncomfortable with these beings because they don't appear to be in any sense really grounded to the mundane plane. It's the exceptions to that, the stable ones, the so-called, the ones that seem to be trustworthy rather than the loonies that are so obsessed with their encounter because they are not-self and they are lost in that. The dilemma of the singular influence is obsession. The new age is filled with beings that are obsessed with these. And the time we live in is filled with beings obsessed with these forces.

I do not know what they are in the sense that I experience them rather often, actually. I experience them as presence and I am aware of the presence. They do not seem to be particularly interested in me, because my awareness of their presence never really seems to lead to anything. And where I have noticed them the most and I don't mean to create bad marketing, but when I notice them the most is when I do Ibiza events. Of course, a lot of that has to do with the fact that I have a very secure bubble that I live in. But of course, the Ibiza event is one of those rare times where I go out and I'm actually teaching live to people instead of my computer screen.

I notice them all the time. It's clear to me that they're busy being attracted to something almost as if they're looking for something. They're around. And yet, for me it's not a matter of saying, aha, that's this. For example, I'm a 3rd color in terms of my personality. It's interesting that when I was a teenager the thing that fascinated me the most of all of these different forms we have here, were aliens. I was part of that whole boom in the science fiction industry in the 50's and the 60's where we had Sputniks and men were going to go the moon and eventually land there. Aliens became the big thing. Of course, this was my transference. Not that I ever had alien encounters, I did not, thank God. I wouldn't want to be one of these people telling about their alien encounters.

I've been correct for a very long time. I do not meet ghosts. I don't have these encounters. I assume that that's because my connection is actually to the design, not the personality. But it's just something that I am aware of and I don't have any particular interest in them to put it in another way. Being able to look at your transference is just a fascinating thing, because it's not telling you what you are attracting, it's telling you about yourself. As a metaphor I was really an alien in that era. I think that that was clear. That attraction and that pull in that way, that was my own alien-ness, if you get my drift. The ghost, if you're a 6 and you're transferred to the 3, being haunted by the past, being haunted by your memories, these are the kinds of things that are going to arise out of that. And yet for me I don't have any of that.

So it's one of the things about understanding all of this. I know there a lot of people who would like to have encounter. And of course, this is the thing that concerns me most about discussing any of this. As I said, I avoided dealing with this the first time around, I just dealt with the mythologies, in a sense, I know that it's attractive to people. I know that they would like to have some kind of transcendent experience, hook up to something that is "this or that," or whatever. I understand all of that. It is interesting. It's a way that a lot of people feel like this is the only way. As a matter of fact, it was the only way for me. I don't think I ever would have believed anybody about anything having to do with magic and mysticism and all of that unless I had had such a startling process myself. It's clear to me. So I do understand there is an aspect that lies within us that would like to have that experience.

The Bundles are Part of the Homogenization Program

And yet, when you understand it within its proper context, you can begin to see that these rogue bundles are part of the great homogenization program. They really are. They shine a light on a weak aspect of oneself. Again, I'm speaking about transference. And they externalize it. They allow it to get externalized through that experience. They transfer their authority to what they perceive is an outside force as a way of trying to free themselves from finding ever their own authority. And every single one of these has its devotees, its minor churches, or major. It has those that are afraid and those that yearn and those that search for and those that claim that they have them.

The next time that you read about in those kinds of places where you can read this stuff about somebody describing their encounter, I want you to think about their transference and then I want you to think about their not-self. Look at their design. Look at what their not-self is. Look at where their color has transferred and then listen to what they have to say. It can be very shocking, because it's not what you think. It's us. Oh yes, they exist.

I had this conversation the other night with a whole bunch of teenagers. Yes, it exists; but, it's not what you think it is. It doesn't work the way you think it works. Isn't it interesting that angels are always experienced basically the same way? This is just a construct. It's part of the way in which the frequency not only was it originally interpreted, but it's been layered over and over and over again in the maia, repeated over and over and over again until it becomes a standard.

You can see that in the evolutionary process because the first bundles, if you can look at it that way, as an evolutionary process, the first bundles were angel bundles, the very beginning of the process. And you can see that when you go along the evolutionary track and in essence this really does work in binaries, by the way, but that's another thing—the ghosts, the living dead and the Gods, the dead immortals, which is kind of a cute juxtaposition. And of course, angels and demons and entities and aliens, and entities and aliens, this is new. These are more recent bundles. When I say more recent, bundles began to expand exponentially with the population explosion that began about 250 years ago. They really set in about 100 years ago. We have this incredible population explosion which means that we have a lot of human beings that don't die correctly so we have this incredible expansion of rogue bundles that are beginning to fill the environment.

I mentioned if you really want to check out the quality of somebody who claims to be a seer or a mystic or somebody who is in touch with the so-called astral or this or that, ask them to explain to you the density of the environment, what is their impression of the density of that environment at that level. And if they do not tell you that it is crowded as hell and hard to make out anything, that is, it is practically impossible to navigate because it is so dense what you're getting is an impression of the rogue bundle environment. This is an incredible thing. That is, it is just expanding at an incredible rate. We've got 40,000 children, just children, an hour that die every day, day in and day out. You've got this incredible expansion.

Aliens

So when you get to the end you have aliens. And again, the same thing has happened with aliens. After all, aliens are basically new. I think the first person that ever speculated on aliens was Christian Huygens who was a famous scientist of the 1700's I believe. He was eventually excommunicated, I think. But he actually wrote a text about his speculation about creatures on the moon. That was his trip.

But the thing that's so interesting about the alien phenomena is that the popularity of it over the last 50 years, one of the most common things is that they all look the same, aside from the Hollywood. If you look at the way that Spielberg in Close Encounters of a Third Kind, or the one with the alien itself, this look, this odd shaped head with a long neck, ET, right, thank you, this is the standard view.

You have people all over the planet who have claimed to have seen these things and this is the image that goes along with it. It's the same image that goes along with the other forces. We have these set ways in which the frequency can be interpreted. But it's all us. And it's one of the things to really see about what was once your true or complete, I should say, not-self, what you were long before you came to this.

You look at the transference of your color. And it's not about the encounter itself. Some of you may have had the encounter, others not. As I said, it isn't really the point. The point is that that transferred frequency in you was bringing out a need for the expression of this energy. In other words, a major dilemma for you locking you, in a sense, to what is the not-self, or what is the homogenized way.

Demons

Let's move along in our little journey. Demons—I have to tell you a wonderful demon story. It was many, many years ago. It was about three months after the

RAVE COSMOLOGY VI: Profile, Purpose and Function

A Digital Book for Students

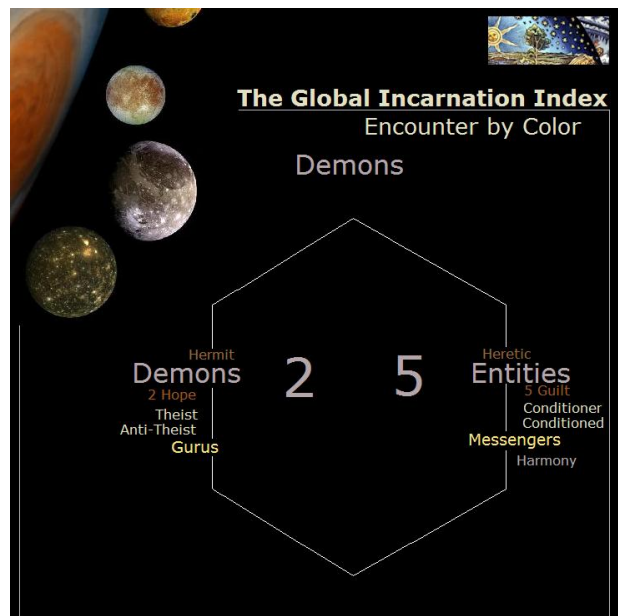

Voice and I was still living in the ruina with my resurrected dog, Barley. I had to go into one of the villages on the island. As I was walking down the street there was a man sitting with an old friend of mine, an American. He called me over and said, "I can help you." I'm a Manifestor, I thought, yeah, right. I said, "What can you help me with?" He said I can get rid of your demons. I thought, ok, that's interesting. My spleen said immediately said, all right. I told him where he could find me.

About a week later he shows up at my ruina and tells me he's come to clean out my demons. It seems he had gone to Japan to study some kind of mantra system that was used by some Japanese woman guru who did this kind of screechy mantra that supposedly rid you of demons. People are into all kinds of weird stuff. Anyway, we go out onto one of these very rough terraces, old farmland that had not been farmed for hundreds of years because of lack of water. He tells me to sit down with my back to him. He tells me he's going to do a mantra and that when he is finished that that's the only time that I can then turn around.

So, I sit there and he starts and I'm a very acoustic being, I'm a pure individual. It was a terrible sound, honestly, it was a terrible sound. It was awful. I don't know how long this thing went on; it went on too long as far as I was concerned. But nonetheless, it went on and on and on. At some point finally—(unknown word)—it ended. I was sort of waiting for him to tell me that it's over and I could get his prognosis of eliminating all of my demons. And I waited and I waited and at some point I turned around and he was gone, which was actually very nice. I went back to my life.

I don't know when it was, weeks later, I'm walking down the main street of my pueblo and I see this guy coming towards me out of the café. He throws his hands up in the air and he screams at me—"Stay away, you're full of demons." I assumed from that that the mantra didn't work. But anyway, being a 5, human beings do have their projections.

The demons; what do we know about the demons? What we know about the demons comes to us from 5th color beings that are transferred. It is the thing to grasp so deeply about this process, it's transferred. And of course, one of the things we know about the transference of the 5 to the 2 is that we get somebody who is blindly hopeful. That's their demon. They are blindly hopeful. This is what destroys their life. They're not there to be blindly hopeful. They don't have the cognitive resources to recognize what to be hopeful about.

The bundle, the rogue bundle that is attracted to the 2nd all it gets is interaction with these 5th color beings that are transferred. Again, the world is not-self. So everything about the nature of these demons is what the demons are bringing into your life. They're bringing into your life a lack of awareness. They blind you. They blind you, a being that's designed to be motivated to know precisely what needs to be worked on, what has to be fixed, where things must change, what needs to be conditioned. And instead they are blindly hopeful and it is that demon that fools them always.

And then they have something to blame. The 5's in transference blame the demons are frightened of them. The demons scare them. But then again, if you're a 2 you're impervious. The magic of the 2 at any level is its capacity to be able to discern. Demons simply are representatives of the form principle, but the form principle in the way it could be understood by the personality. These demons puff up the blind hope. They do.

The Rogues Take Away Your Authority

Think about the beginning of this binary, the angel people. And these angel people who are 4's are deeply transferred. And what they end up with is this blind fear. And the angel just increases the fear. The presence of the angel simply transfers protection away from oneself to something else. I have my angel walking over me, she says, as the car hits her. I remember meeting a channel and her telling me that who she was channeling, which I think was Seth, had suggested that the two of us work together. And I can remember saying, you can always call me. Angels. Every single one of these bundles, these rogues, they're there to take away your authority. Again, I'm talking about the not-self. They take away your authority. They do.

So what can it be really like? You're a 2nd color being, you're motivated specifically. Your decision making process is rooted in a deep cognitive recognition of what does not require your interference, that there is no need to interfere; none. In essence, it's the embodiment of form principle as a personality message. It is. It's like the Hindu mythology that your body is made up of devas, that it's made of form principle, the demons. But you see they're magical. Because when you meet them, like meeting anything when you're correct, that you're meeting and affirming consciousness connection. It's not what they represent in the common mythology.

We have to rebuild our understanding of all of this based on experience of those that operate correctly and it means those whose personalities operate correctly and that is not an easy thing. And that the vast majority of the billion and a half people that are going to have a 2nd color personality, something like that, that the demon in their life is that blind hope, that blind hope that you can drink yourself silly every day and it won't kill you, that blind hope, the demon has got me.

It's always us. If you're a 5 and you're transferred you're always dealing with your demons. You're caught in an inability to be moved to do anything about what you need to do something about. And if you happen to actually encounter one, then you know in essence you're really in trouble, because it's a hook of your not-self. And because it is in its own way relatively speaking quite spectacular if you have these kinds of experiences, there is an immediate offering of authority.

The program is not interested in unique authority. It is not what it is interested in at all. We have to rediscover what these things are in relationship to our correctness, what can they offer, if anything. And that the very descriptions that we have for them, in the end we will see, is meaningless, because in the end what we're looking at is only ourselves. And we're really talking about six different kinds of people, six different kinds of personalities is more precise. And this is what these forces are. We are the living angels, demons, blah, blah, blah.

The 3rd and 6th Colors

The world depends on the 3rd color. That is, not-self humanity, homogenized humanity, this is the vast field of sheep. The 3rd color is a motivation to lead. Again, we know that the world is not-self, so what we know is that the way in which the 3rd color operates is that it operates through the transference of the 6. And it means there is no cognitive capacity behind the drive to lead. There is simply the blind drive to lead.

And it's one of the things to understand about all leaders is that all false leaders are haunted by their past in one way or another. It is something that is interesting to think about in the context of what these things can be, could be, and might be, the fact that the 3rd color, in essence, is in its correctness able to leave behind the problems or the dilemmas or the difficulties of the past. And we know that in the continuity of 3's that vitality is something that is inherent in the 3, this capacity to be beaten down and rise back up, this ability to keep on banging in or having things bang into you and still maintain the integrity even in not-self, a not-self purpose. It is inherent in this.

And in this motivation, this so-called desire is the locking into a theme. One of the phenomena's amongst all of these that has consistently been discussed for hundreds of years is ghosts. And this is, in the way in which it is expressed through the distorted 3 frequency, this is the deep dilemma of these beings. This is where their problem is, their own ghosts, their shadows, their past. And it forces them to carry it with them. It is not a pleasant thing; it isn't.

The encounter with a ghost never allows you to really live your life. It doesn't allow you to live your future. What happens to all of us when we discuss a ghost—"Who was it and when?" It's such a joke. It locks us into a spiral downward and it's our spiral downward.

How easy it is for us to be manipulated, for us to be devised in such a way as a mechanism that we can become almost schizophrenic in the way in which we can turn our deepest fears into an externalization, the deep fears that are there that bring out the angel. It just brings it out. It's somewhere inside of the being, but they cannot grasp it themselves. It is something that I had to accept when I finally came to my senses, so to speak, after my life as not-self. I had to see so clearly that the past is just one decision after the other.

And if the decisions are made by the not-self, what to do, there's no blame, no fault, no shame. Like these people who say, oh, I wish I knew this 20 years ago. It's not true. It wasn't meant for you 20 years ago. It's now. These beings that are 3rd color, the past is something that they have to come to grips with. And of course, again it's all about authority. All of this is about the abandonment of authority, it's why you don't see correctness, and it's why we don't have correct encounters. Human beings are so distorted, so homogenized, and so lost.

And our leaders that come out of that 1 billion plus that are going to be born with a 3rd color and do nothing, and those that are born with a 6th color that they're the ones that are going to want to be leaders. And they're the ones that can never deal with their past. They can't. Oh, is it going to catch up to them, because they can't. They all try to control it, hide it, so afraid of mistakes catching up with them. The dirty linen that is always somewhere in the 6 that is transferred to the 3. And they're not really locked in. This is not true desire, this is blind.

It's so interesting to think about how blind we are as a species, how that veil is pulled over our eyes, how the very distortions of our frequency become the density of our maia, all of those 6's and their ghosts. And very few of them will have encounter, but all of them will have that ghost within them, that fear, that concern that something is going to catch them. Why do you think so many of these leaders become so unbelievably cruel? Don't want any surprises, don't want anything coming out of the darkness and spoiling anything. You want to clean up all of those old ghosts, make sure they don't have a future. It's quite a thing.

Written question: Would you say that there is a distinction between higher and lower octaves between these rogue bundles and the true personality crystal field? Through transference we get the lower frequency, the rogue bundle - like a contamination. Through alignment, the personality gets the transmission from home base - the personality sheath in the atmosphere - "your bundle". There is a polarity between false guidance and true attunement to cosmic origins and destination, which submits to the Design.

Ra: Well, fundamentally yes, that's true. It's clear to me—I'm at a disadvantage in the sense that I've had a lot of mystical experiences in my process and obviously I had quite a major one, but it was specifically related to Design. I don't think that these rogue bundles are particularly attracted to me. I don't even think they particularly like me. I may give off a funny frequency, I don't know. As I said, my living out the purity of what I am as a 3rd color personality and it is certainly clear to me I live this out as correctly as I can as my authority that this is not something that is there. Nor is the past that has been so much a part of the not-self and all the things and all of that. All of that has been left behind by the awareness I have now. I am uncertain, in that sense, of what the quality is for those of you that have strong personality connections as potential encounter connections to these particular bundles.

I don't know what that actually is about. I don't; I can't. Again, I can speculate, but even speculation is uncertain. For example, though I am aware of bundles, as I've mentioned, I'm rarely aware of distinction. I tend to feel the presence of what I call the distortion of the neutrino ocean. There's something filtering the ocean differently and I have a sense of it. I don't have a natural attunement to the classic descriptions of them.

I don't see them this way. That's my perspective. My perspective is these are rogue bundles. The other side of that perspective is that you've got human beings and their color, and their color does funny things when it connects to these rogue bundles. And because most people are in transference they get this lack of cognition transference connection to these rogue bundles that has become the tradition of identifying these things as angels, demons, ghost, whatever the case may be.

What is the Value of Encounter When Met in Correctness?

So, what in fact is the true potential? That's something we have to wait and see. Each being as they go through their holistic process and we're all in that process at one level or another, ultimately if it's in the cards for those encounters we will begin to get feedback from your outer authority, or for whoever's outer authority is what it really is, what is the value of it, what is the value of it when you meet it in correctness, and is there one. Are they even interested in you if you're correct?

Again, my own experience would say no, but then I have a feeling that mechanically I'm just not connected to them in a way. It's clear to me that they go around me. I can feel all that going around me, so I don't know. But obviously, in the community there have always been those that have through the personality had the sensitivity to be connected to these phenomena, at least to attract them.

Again, for example, for me when I look at the transference, my assumption is that transference creates a much stronger frequency than the actual frequency of somebody that is correct. It is that uber frequency that in essence probably gives the distorted value to what these things are. But what we're really looking at is six psychological dilemmas that exist in the human that need to find expression this way as part of the way in which motivation is controlled by the greater forces, by the program itself.

Anyway, in this kind of situation it's clear, the kind of phenomena that we're getting, you're getting this process. So we don't really know. What we know is what the 6 experiences. This is what we know. And as I said, this is the dilemma. All those who are not designed to lead, who are not here motivated to lead, all of whom who are driven to want to lead that all of them are going to end up with this ghost dilemma in their psychology and not necessarily the actual encounter. Again, I think the encounters themselves are relatively rare. I'm not sure whether the encounter is the byproduct of the potential for recognition at some different level, what is possible for a personality that is relatively disengaged, or whether the encounter is only something that comes with the locking into a distorted frequency. I don't know.

I don't know whether the actual frequency is going to be more attractive than the transfer. If we had a 3 and a 6 and they're walking out in the wilderness together and there is a bundle that is coming along and the 3 is correct and the 6 is not-self which aura, because the bundle will not work with both, which aura will the bundle go to? I guess it's one of those wonderful eye-of-the-needle questions. I don't know how to legitimize any kind of answer.

There is a part of me intellectually that has a feeling that it will be attracted to the transference because the transference somehow will empower the information of the filtering more. But again, I don't know. I don't know if it's naturally attracted to the pure frequency of 3 and settles for the transference. Or whether it is attracted to the transference and doesn't quite know what to do with the real one.

You can tell I'm in a place where I just don't know. I have my suspicions. As I said, I assume it's the transference, but I don't know. And again, I'm getting there simply because of the way in which I experience things. I don't think I can be purely objective in this kind of speculation. Maybe 20 years from now, 25 years from now, when there is enough awareness in the Design community and enough population that we have experience with this that perhaps we can get a new insight into what that's all about. But until then, we're dealing with the domain of speculation.

The 4th and 1st Colors

Written comment: Can we bring a friend when we transfer?

Ra: Cute; where to go. In a way this is really a lovely one, I guess. They're all interesting; they're all fun from my perspective. It's interesting for me to see the madness of the not-self and the way that works. On the other side of the madness of the not-self is a kind of awe at the capacities of mind. I grew up in the 60's so I grew up in the drug revolution. It's so obvious to me that my mind has interpreted different kinds of natural chemistries, artificial chemistries. It's something that you learn from experiences. Everyone who has ever taken a peyote or a datura will tell you that you go through the same processes, the same rituals, the same patterns, you meet the same forces. It is so obvious that different chemistries, different frequencies have unique impacts on the way in which our brain can interpret them, there's just no question about it.

RAVE COSMOLOGY VI: Profile, Purpose and Function

And that no matter how much we would like to say the experience is on the outside of us that what we can really recognize is that this is an entertainment that has been wholly produced from within. It isn't to discount the source of whatever may have initiated that, but it's to really grasp that all interpretation of such phenomena is limited to our capacity and limited to our frequency and our design, and it goes on and on and on and on in that sense.

It's very important for me mechanically that you separate the catchy pop mythologies that go along with all of these things and your set way of looking at them and let go of that. The 4th color being is motivated to know exactly what's necessary, this is the potential of the master, to know precisely what's necessary; nothing more, nothing less, and it is a magical thing. And of course, what we get is a transference to the 1st color and of course there is no cognition here so that transference to the 1st color simply means that one is afraid of everything.

The 1st color and its most natural correctness is simply about making sure that one has solid footing. And basically it means that one looks into things, that one doesn't just accept things on the surface, that things need to be explored. And once they're explored then everything is going to be much more clearer in terms of whatever has to be done with the information. This is the 1st color motivation, this driving motivation to get rid of the fear, not to have the fear and not to be fearful.

And it isn't fear in the sense of, oh, my God, what am I going to do. It is more this, I don't like the fact that I don't understand what's going on and I'm being asked to make a decision. It's very different. It is a fear of making a bad decision. It's the fear of making a fool out of oneself. And all of that is based on not being motivated to get the information in, in the continuity, the investigation ultimately that we get to see in the 1 continuity as a line, dig in, motivation to dig in. And suddenly it's gone. And what we have is this 4 transferred to a 1 that has no cognition and everything is fearful.

And it means that there is no guidance as to what one should be concerned about as opposed to—oh my God, it's overwhelming. Oh, they're so happy when they have their angel, aren't they? "Please help me"; you know. "I've got all these problems and you're my angel, what do I do?" Human beings—it's the transference that colors it all. It would be very different, obviously very different, if we had somebody that was really living their 4 personality, somebody that recognizes cognitively, is motivated towards necessity and nothing else.

When you're a 1 and you're transferred over to the 4 it is really distorting. These are the loonies. We meet these loonies all the time. These are the ones that there's always a God speaking to them in their ear. "God told me." And it doesn't matter whether it's THE God, numero uno, it's a generic. And as I said, what I am so clear about is that my understanding of all of this, because it is the way, literally that it was explained to me, it's just about the not-self. These are basic questions. What are these things? I was told in cosmology that this plane is the center of everything in terms of the consciousness program. So I want to know what the hell these things are. Are there aliens? Ha, ha, ha, yeah, right. Well, there are about a billion aliens on earth, you saw them in the supermarket, and some of them may be your neighbors. It's just the alien in them.

Attachments to the Rogue Bundles

And of course, you really only get to see the aliens through people like me who are 3rd color, and the 3rd color beings who are not-self, man, these are the real aliens. And when you see these people you know, you really do. It's just the way that it is. It's us. I don't mean to belabor the point with you, but I have to, because of all the things that I teach—people have attachments. People have attachments to their fantasies about that I was Cleopatra, I was Hitler, I was Dracula—it's usually people that are out there in the common whatever. There are people who are attached to things. They've had experiences. I am not somebody who—I have no need. I used to be very much like that, because I used to ridicule these things because I thought they were absolutely absurd. I just assumed these people were just nuts.

Now, I understand that they're connected to frequency, but it doesn't mean that they're not nuts. They're not grounded in any potential of the way things work. And I think there is a real attachment, I'm sure there is an attachment to many of you to these concepts of whatever, angels, demons, all these things. These are very powerful homogenization concepts. They're very, very powerful. And in essence that's why I said before that my tendency is to assume that the more correct you are the less chance you're going to have an encounter, and in fact heal yourself of that.

The fact is that they are expressed deeply through the not-self and only through the not-self. This is what has given them their vitality; this is what's given them their description. And basically when you look at these themes you're looking at the real problem themes of the psychology of homogenized humanity. It's just fascinating when you just deconstruct it and you rip all of this stuff.

And I know there is this attachment, ok, I've met an angel, I've met a ghost, yeah, ok, terrific. However, the point in all of that is that meeting one of those is an indication of how deep you are in your not-self and that's what clear to me. And the more obsessed you are with the subject the more obvious it is, it's connection to your not-self. And again, it's your connection to your motivation. That means it's the connection to the frequency and the behavior of your personality. And if your personality's frequency and behavior is incorrect you get that game that emerges out of these forces.

I get to see that in DreamRave, I get to see that wherever you look whether I do it quarter by quarter where I looked at the major bundles, the 16 primary bundles, or you look at these rogues bundles, it's all the same thing. It is a streaming ocean of data that's filtered through us. And the way in which it's filtered is dependent on our frequency. And the frequency of the planet is not-self; at least that's what I call it. This is what's called normal out there. That the normal world operates through this not-self frequency which distorts the values of all the input, all of them.

The Essence of Incorrectness

We know that the not-self mind is both inner and outer authority. That it lies, that it's distorted in its perspective, that it doesn't see correctly, that it's rarely in the right place. That it has been physically homogenized from the moment that it was put on its mother's breast unless you happen to be a 3rd color design left sided. This is a conditioned world. These are elements of the conditioning process. They are in so many ways the essence of incorrectness. They didn't die correctly; they didn't live their lives correctly. What kind of role model influence do you think that is? Not only did they never get to live the correctness of the potential of what it is to be a personality crystal in conscious form, but they will never get the opportunity again, never; locked in.

In Correctness the Possibility to Discern Information

These are not positive forces no matter what the hell you call them. This is not positive influence. I think the more correct you are perhaps is the possibility to discern information in their presence. Like all human beings when they get beyond being conditioned, the potential of wisdom that arises out of their openness, this wonderful transition from being a victim to becoming wise through the same place. These are all programming agencies, all of them.

Liberate Your Personality

And the distortion is in us. I tell you the same thing over and over again. My whole process is the repetition of Strategy and Authority, align the vehicle, work on the personality, liberate the personality from being in charge of your life; liberate it. And as long as you don't liberate that personality these themes are hanging around. And as long as you don't liberate your personality its transference, whatever that leads to, that is something that can hover around it. And of course, it doesn't take a lot for the personality to want to make a decision when it's afraid, to take control of the life, to be driven by these forces to act. "The angel told me to do it, the demon made me do it. I was following the ghost; I was listening to the gods," these people who say that whole story. I know, I understand. I'm an archetype of that myself—"The Voice said..." Yeah, well, thank God all of this is logical.

The not-self is a horrendous thing, it really is. It's like somebody that goes into a museum and you have this incredible painting in front of you and you just splatter it with vomit. It's the not-self, and nothing makes it pretty; nothing. I love the paintings of Goya, and particularly the darker his work; the distorted faces, the pain, the misery, the seeping blackness of the life, oh, the not-self.

And no matter what it dresses up as, no matter what it pretends it is, it is not-self. We are not here to be manipulated by bundles of anything. This is for the homogenized sheep. I am not in the sheep training business. This is the wolf training business. We're all part of an environment that is constantly having its sheep-ness reinforced over and over and over and over again. The not-self gives authorities to these encounters—it's themselves, by the way, but nonetheless. They are so afraid of being in charge of their own life; they don't even know what that means. They have no idea what that means. The typical 18 year old that's going out the door—"Well, you're going to have to look after yourself now." Yeah, right, sure, what does that mean if you don't know how to make a decision, if you don't know how to at least attempt to live correctly? Then you attract what you deserve.

I had about 10 years of my career in which I traveled extensively and taught. I met all kinds of people, particularly through the introductory evenings that I would do, and I've met a lot of loonies, a lot of people that are really spaced out. You can see it in their eyes. Somebody like me with three open motors you can feel it in their frequency. They all wanted to tell me about how they had given away their authority to some force, because that's basically what they were trying to get across to me, that they had had this or that or whatever the case may be.

No Blame, No Fault; No Trust

What to do. No blame, no fault is one of the most beautiful things that I've learned in this process. It is an arrogance and a profound one to blame and find fault. That in correctness there is no such thing. Not for yourself and not in terms of your relationship to the other. And it's so obvious to me there are so many, so, so many human beings whose whole lives are not simply distorted by the not-self of their particular variation, but their obsessions. And their obsessions that lock them into the same horror. These are the same people that will have themselves cremated or buried almost instantly at death, funny enough; so that new recruits, as it were, for the rogue bundles.

I don't trust anything. What's to trust? The only thing that matters to me is that in the existential moment I'm breathing. That's the movie. But trust the angels and the demons and the gods and all of that, to trust the authority of our leaders when I know damn well that not a single one of them is a natural leader. Do I trust the investigators when not a single one of them is motivated to really get to the bottom of things, to a bottom that only they can find that no one else could reach? Do I trust humanity that is not-self, that operates over and through any combinations of the openness that is there in their design, that they are all lies, endless lies, layers and layers and layers of lies? Do I trust that?

We are a very, very small group. This, even as I watch the expansion of Human Design the fact is that that expansion, at least for the time being is taking place where it should, on the surface. When you get down here you begin to see the limitations of knowledge. You begin to see that the whole mechanism that is rooted in the cosmology of the way in which all of this works is not for the fulfillment of individual authority; this is not part of the agenda of the totality. It's not. It is not a concern. And that for every black sheep there are forces that are constantly and controlling and maintaining all the sheep.

Disposal Units

The most startling is to understand what happens to you when you go to sleep, when your personality is disconnected and when you're programmed specifically for your weaknesses, specifically; it's spooky. It's really spooky; there you are all day working on—I'm a Generator and I'm going to respond and the moment you go to sleep the forces go digging inside so that you'll wake up with a certain uncomfortableness that can drive you to give authority back to your mind. This is all a vast mechanical cabal. And these rogue bundles, in essence, serve no purpose. We can make one up for them. I call them disposal units. I don't mean to be crude. But it seems to me it's what they are. They're flying garbage cans.

I look at the mechanics and I strip away the whole veil, take away all the crap, just see things for what they are. And what do you come to? You come to only one thing. You come to yourself. This knowledge, one being at a time, one person at a time, one human being at a time, and they by themselves, no one can do this for you, nobody can be your authority. It's an incredible revolution. And it's a revolution that stands in the face of enormous forces.

I am a heretic. I know how heavy those forces are, how deep they are into the soul of humanity; I know. And I am grasping at straws trying to reach those that are sort of, not fully taken in. They're rare, because it's so dense. Everything is fixed, the dream is fixed, and the encounters are fixed. It's all just a trap to maintain the personality in a state of not-self, transference and distorted frequency.

And then it does precisely what the program wants. When I say "want," it isn't conscious, it's just the way the program works. One of my favorite writers of the 70's was a guy by the name of Thomas Pynchon. I remember he wrote a book, I think it was Gravity's Rainbow, and said you can't shit against gravity. Oh, you cannot do that against the program. It's so powerful.

Save Your Life

I don't know how many of you understand that many, many, many of the underlying things that I teach would be absolutely infuriating to so many cultural and religions forms on this planet. We are talking about control mechanisms; these are all control mechanisms. It's what I love about Design. What a gift. And it didn't come from the personality bundles, and it didn't come from the rogues. It didn't come from that all that propagating source. It came from the form factory. Here's the manual; see what you can do with it. I know what you can do with it. You can save your life, your life. You can get it, your life. Maybe if you're lucky you can turn around and give it to your loved ones, to your children, to your friends. And each of them can have that potential of being able to recognize something that will save their life.

I remind you of how important it is to pay attention to those you meet. It may be the only chance they ever get, to have somebody tell them something that's true. That's it. We are about not being fooled. We are not here to be tricked. We're not here to be blindly led to slaughter, to the boredom of old age, to disease. We're not here to repeat the same nonsense, the same mantras, and the same folly. We're each here to set a new path; each of us, because there is no single way. There is our way. And what this manual brings you is a way of navigating through this dense conditioned maia. And you navigate it as a passenger, disconnected, not involved. Your vehicle knows how to navigate the maia. The monopole runs the show.

You sit back and you watch. For whatever it is; it is the movie we have. It is the entertainment that is there. Like watching some film in which everyone is trapped, and how ultimately you yearn for them to be freed. You look at the world around you; you will see they are trapped. They are. So when you think about these forces, yeah, I know, it can seem rather interesting. And yes, it's there. But oh boy, it is not what you think it is.

Ok, folks, that's what I have for you today. They let me tell you this time. Anyway, to all of you, you take care. I'll see you next time; bye for now.

Lecture Ten

Entities and Aliens and a Story

Well, we have arrived at the end of another year of Rave Cosmology, and in this particular case, the close of this semester. Yes, it's been interesting. Let's see where we go.

More and More Incarnation Taking Place

We've been looking at one of the more interesting phenomena that is part of the cosmology of life and death and the potentials of incarnating or reincarnating. What we see is that the way in which our civilization has developed is that it has in so many ways been the sponsor of the possibility of mutation. That is, there is a certain number of personality crystals that are always ready and always able to experience form and yet rarely, if ever, get the opportunity. We've had over the last, particularly during this time of the Cross of Planning since the beginning of the 1600's more people have lived and died than have ever lived before on the planet.

It means more and more incarnation is taking place. What is so interesting about that process is coincidental with the way in which this population explosion worked, was that these various variations on what it is to be human all carried with them religious dogma that encouraged immediate disposal of the body. It is fascinating to think that all of that is in order to make way for the potential of mutation. Most of those crystals of consciousness that have incarnated particularly over the last 400 years, and not all because serendipity plays a huge role in this, most of the incarnating crystals have done so for the first time, and for the only time, because they emerge into a cultural principle that denies them the opportunity to return to source.

So, we've had a phenomenon that has been developing basically since the major religions were established several thousand years ago. We have a phenomenon of the expansion of rogue bundles. That is, personality crystal bundles, minor in size compared to the primary 16 bundles. Rogue bundles not only increasing in size themselves, still very minor relative to the originals, but also expanding in number. One of the most intense phenomena of the last several thousands of years has been the crowding of the maia with the impact of these forces.

Basically, the thing that makes them interesting to human beings, because it is human beings that give them their names is the fact that they seem to be—I don't even know how to describe that—it seems that part of the result of the happenstance of them existing, because I don't know how else to describe that, is that they fulfill some kind of process by the interaction with the human aura. Again, they are not, in and of themselves, conscious. So they are simply an instrument of programming. But rather than the primary bundles that operate very deeply through our chemistry, that is, from the bottom up that the rogue bundles operate on the surface. That is, the surface connection to our frequency.

And remember it's not a connection to us; it is the connection to the frequency. And of course, this is where the dilemmas arise in what I have been trying to illustrate to you. The bundles are attracted to a frequency. So, if you're a 6 and you're in transference to a 3, then ghost is what's going to be there. And of course, again, not having the cognitive potential there is a distortion in the encounter and it leads to problems, it leads to dependences, it leads to an inability to reconnect to the constraints and the limitations of living in the maia, which is as far as illusion dictates, is a material plane.

Rogue Bundles and Their Purpose

So it's something to really think about in terms of these rogue bundles and if there is a purpose; I was not told anything about them having a purpose. It was simply clear to me from my own perspective that these are—there is no polite way to say that they're sort of being disposed of this way. I can't think of it any other way. They're just being disposed of this way. These are not crystals that are ever going to incarnate again, and these are not crystals that are going to get beyond the doorway of the transformation that comes at the end of this round.

These are sort of like little garbage cans that you have on your computer screen and they're never really empty. The stuff is there, but it serves no purpose. The interaction with the human, again, I don't think that there is such a thing as a purpose for these things. I do think that there is obviously an effect and that of course is the thing that is so interesting. That is, the impact particularly on the transferred being, because that's where we get all the reputations for all of these things.

I am uncertain, because again, I only have my experience to go on. I am uncertain of what the relationship is for each and every one of you as you come closer and closer to the fulfillment of your own process what that alignment to what is your frequency will bring, if it brings anything. The thing that is also interesting about it is that I do not understand, for example, what is the geometry of these forces. It's clear to me that there is a geometry and it is clear to me that there are not as many of them as there are humans on this plane. So there is some kind of either selection process that is taking place, or there is an encounter, some kind of—it's very hard to discuss it, because I don't really grasp why they have a relationship with one being or the other. That is, we all put out a frequency. The vast majority of the planet is in transference. Not everyone in transference who is putting out a transferred frequency is going to be aligned to these forces, these bundles.

So there are obviously other factors that are work. I can only work from my grey theoretical level. After all, this is somewhere over 60 lectures now over these two years on what I originally termed grey subjects. These were never subjects that I was fully comfortable with because I could not see all of the mechanisms nor did I expect at any time that I would even have time to explore it. It's turned out better than I thought in that sense. But there were some things that were just thrown at me like—just sort of half things that arose out of the experience. It was like learning about the various forms. It only happened because of my dog and my concerns for my dog. Otherwise, I don't think that the direction where I was in my process at that moment would have led there.

So, anyway, there are a lot of things in all of this that will take time and will take true outer authorities to be able to express it. That is, ultimately, the passenger that awakens is a passenger that is going to be aware of these things whether they encounter them or not. I'm very aware of these forces around me. And when I say around me, I don't mean that they're always there. And I don't mean that they're there for me, because they're obviously not. But it's like somehow it's possible for me to be aware of them without them being interested in me.

As I said, I see them a lot, for example, in my classrooms, my live classrooms. I don't know what that would be like for anyone else, because again, I think that the reputation that these forces have and the way in which they influence humanity is rooted in the transference, not in what the potential of whatever the relationship may or may not be. After all, it is programming and it's rogue crystal bundle programming for whatever that's worth. It doesn't mean that it's filled with bad crystals. But, it is different. It is impacting the personality.

Again, one of the most interesting things about Human Design is that it is able to explore subjects like this quite logically. And at the same time protect you from the delusion that these things can bring, anything related to the mind. The mind is wonderful at being able to assess data, however the data is derived. That is the beauty of what mind is. Only when the personality, only when the passenger is in that situation where it can just assess data are we going to get the kind of outer authority that is going to be able to express the essence of what these things are.

I went through a very long process, Quarter by Quarter, which is really one of the great adventures that I've had as a teacher. In looking at all of the godheads represented by the primary crystal bundles it is clear to me that the older of the rogue bundles probably do have some kind of personality. That is, personality in terms of a consistent influence along a human fractal line that it has had connections to.

But at the same time all of this is a construct out of the not-self, the not-self motivated in a way that it cannot see with a lack of mental acuity because the cognitive potential isn't there. So, when anybody ever talks to me about ghost, I assume they're a 6th color. What am I going to say to them, they're in transference? It is a long journey before what their experience and what they think their experience can be left behind so they can encounter what is potential for them. It's the same thing that would float around them.

That's the joke, actually. I think that's the best joke of all. You've got a bundle over here and this bundle is attracted to this 3rd frequency, because that's what it's interested in, it's interested in the frequency. So you've got this person in transference and they're over there and the bundle is attracted to them. But the fact of the matter is if the bundle happened to be over here and was attracted to the 6, the same bundle would be attracted to the 6 frequency. In other words, whatever frequency is being put out that's what aspect of the bundle one will relate to. That ghost that morphs into an alien, because it is the ghost that morphs into an alien. It's interesting to think about that. The angels morph into Gods and the demons morphing into entities, and vice versa, by the way, but to go the other way you'd need to have a black sense of humor, deliciously black.

Entities and Aliens

Ah, entities, what a wonderful name, no? It's so interesting when you look at the evolution of the numbers. It's one of the things that intrigues me the most about the onion, the layers. If you look at the evolution of the numbers, if you look at the 1st tone and you move up to the 6, if you look at the 1st color and you move up, you look at the 1st line and you move up, you see this progression that is there.

It is not to say in anyway whatsoever that one is better than the other because it actually has nothing to do with that. But it is a progression, it is a movement. Everything is a movement. And whenever you're looking at any of these numbers in Design and they're the continuity in this knowledge, you also have to think of them in terms of their evolution. There is a sensitivity that is there that emerges in the upper trigram, that emerges in the upper colors, that emerges in the right tones. It is something that is different. It doesn't have the same grounding in the processes that it is associated with. It's different.

This frequency, the entity, it is interesting to me about both the entity and particularly the alien. Something struck me years ago. I was living in Sedona, Arizona, I had just moved to Sedona, Arizona in the late 90's. Wherever I went there were these alien people. Literally alien people, people who were convinced there were aliens, people who had been to alien landing spots, people who knew where they were. It was filled with a lot of alien people. It was more alien people in a square block than I had ever met anywhere on the planet—alien Christians, which I thought was interesting Christian alien people.

Something struck me about Arizona. When I was growing up in Canada, Arizona was a place you went to if you had tuberculosis or you were dying; it was one or the other. It was a place where a lot of old people went to die and to be buried right away, by the way. And it struck me as hilarious that here is Sedona, Arizona and all these alien people and there were all these rogue crystal bundles that emerged there. The tens of thousands of geezers that met their end in the Arizona desert, perhaps my sense of humor is too black for this occasion. But nonetheless, it's as funny as it's probably true.

An Explosion in Rogue Bundles

It's something to think about. We've had an explosion in these rogue bundles over the last 400 years. We've had an enormous explosion over the last 100 years, an enormous explosion over the last 100 years of the population of this planet and all of those that are dying like flies all over this planet who are immediately dealt with. So we have an enormous number of rogue bundles that carry with them very strong 5th and 6th frequency connectivity. How we experience these is the basis of our science fiction. It is the basis of the science fiction that I teach you when I talk about the right and what right tone really is and what it leads to and how uniquely different it is.

I've had this discussion many times. Going back to the very first Rave Cosmology class, a conversation I had with my teenage son and his friends the other day. They wanted to know if I believed in aliens. And of course, that's a very complex answer for me. That's one of those yes-and-no answers. Their real question wasn't: Are there aliens. Their real question was: How big is the sky. And they've been asking that question since they were like three or four years old.

The very presence of this rogue bundle attraction to the 6 frequency, and the very fact that it is a relatively modern mutation, as we look into the sky we lose all sense of scale. We are lost in our smallness, our tininess, our nothingness in relationship to a vastness that we cannot comprehend. No matter what we try to do, no matter what our imagination or mathematics is, the vastness of the way in which we perceive the totality is not something we can grasp.

But that is not my perspective. Perhaps I'm mad. But then again, perhaps I am who knows. It's not my perspective at all. My assumption is that I have no way of knowing if it is big or small. I live in an illusion. The sky that I look at, I look at because my eyes, the way in which they are placed in my head, the way in which the rods operate, the way in which that information is collected, the way it is assembled in my neocortex, the way in which it comes back to me as an impression, what the hell is that? Am I going to use that for measurement, really, when I cannot, in fact, see.

There is nothing that I can really see in all of this other than what I am conditioned by the very form in which I am a passenger I am conditioned by, that's the limitation. I don't know if it's big. I know it's an oneness or a wholeness, is probably better, I don't think it's an oneness, I think it's a wholeness. That's clear to me, that the center of its developing consciousness is here. I think about scale a lot. Let's say that I'm a neutrino and I'm flying into my brain case. And let's say that me being that neutrino that I could see relative to the way I see now, I wouldn't see anything different. Well, I assume it would be a much better show than the night sky because we have an atmosphere, pollution. To be a neutrino in the brain pan, to watch the neurons firing, must be one of the most incredible things one could imagine seeing.

They are of Us

And from the perspective of the neutrino what is all that? It is vast. It's like the wonder of a cell. It has in no way a grasp of what the totality is. How can it? It does not. It is locked into its cell ness. That is its process, its life, its death, its cell ness. I don't think that any of these things are outside of us. They are of us. These rogue bundles are made up of dead parts, sort of, abandoned things, the scrap yard of personality consciousness to be really rude. It's us, after all, locked out of the shell game, round and round she goes and where she stops nobody knows; you get your shot. And then you end up in the recycling bin, except there is no recycling. You just end up in the bin. It's us.

One of the things that I appreciate so deeply about the knowledge that I was given is that it gave me a way to be correct in death. That's something that is, at least from my perspective, as important as knowing how to live. There is more than just this. There is a huge process. And I like the fine line of correctness. I was always an admirer of tightrope walkers. I had a great deal of respect for that, this balance and courage. To keep one's balance, to walk the fine line of self. And to walk that line all the way. To leave this plane and enjoy the glory that comes with that, because it's there to be released from the form. All the masters have swooned over such a concept, to be released from the form. To experience what it is to be personality and only personality, well, sort of. There is a little bit of illusion in all of that; there always is.

But it doesn't really matter. There is a right way to leave this plane. And these bundles, they're not bad, it's not their fault, and they're not evil. They're not anything. They are what they meet and what they meet is us. What they influence is only your personality. That means that if you're correct they influence nothing. If you're not correct then they can take you away. We are very, very easily manipulated as not-self. And the extraordinary, the out of the ordinary, the deeply odd is something that both enthralls and frightens the not-self. The saner ones don't want anybody to know that they may be mad—a little bit cuckoo or a little weird, a little off. And those that don't have such a safety valve in the not-self can get very disturbed and obsessed.

The Bundles Bring Out Obsessions

The thing that I see the most out of what I grasp as the impact of these bundles in the world is that it brings out obsessions. People who are obsessed with these various things; they're really obsessed with them to the point where it's spooky. For me this is where these forces really latch on, that not-self frequency, because a lot of people think it's cool to meet these things or it would be cool to meet these things. Like the silly people who used to say to me, would I like to meet the Voice again? That's horrifying, frankly. These are not things that you want to deal with lightly. They're the forces, after all, and the personality is helpless if it's not-self in the conditioning of what the forces can do. The not-self is driven by fear. It is easily deluded; it can be easily influenced to do the most horrendous things. We know what people do in the name of these things.

What's important is frequency. The key to understanding what we are mystically is to understand that we are potentially perfect frequency. This is what it's about. All the rest of it, all the accoutrement, all the way we look at it and think about it and everything else, it is the frequency in the end that matters. And the frequency is something that is mechanical. You cannot adjust your frequency from the mental plane. You adjust your frequency through the form. It's where it begins. And then there is the slow process of attuning the personality to that frequency.

And when you're correct in that frequency, when you're properly motivated, when the cognition is correct, when the decisions are being made out of your inner authority you no longer, as far as I can tell, of much interest to these forces. Yet, at the same time, it opens up the window of being aware of them. They cannot hide when the passenger knows how to see. This is one of the things about being a passenger. It's one of the things that the mind would really enjoy thinking about if it could think that itself could experience it.

It's what we of the drug generation looked for, that altered perspective, that different way of seeing. And of course, this is the entitlement of the passenger. When your passenger is correct enough that this is something that it notices, you've got yourself a good trip. That's quite a moment. And it isn't a big deal, by the way. What you'll discover is that the world that we live in is literally overcrowded with them, in a sense. There are a lot of them. And you see them in relationship to people because they're usually moving around someone. And not all those people that they're moving around are aware of them. Yet, at the same time, their personalities are being conditioned by them. The forces; we are all subject to the power of the forces if we are still engaged in our lives. As long as your mind is your decision making authority you are a pawn—the mouse to the great cat of the program.

A Rave Cosmology Story

In 1989 I had written in November what was the first book in Design, The Black Book. I was in Germany at the time. I wrote that book in a suburb of Frankfurt, Germany. A number of months later I ended up in Bavaria in a very, very old village called (sounds like Garsamin). I'd actually gone there to work with a band, a group of musicians. We had been offered a recording contract with a German record label. In that was a small wooden house in the countryside by the river Inn. It was in that place that I began to do what were actually my first professional readings.

I had just written all the lines and it was an interesting process. I started to do the first readings. I began to sort of make notes about things and begin to develop my own understanding of what that was all about. And at the same time I realized right away even at the primitive level that I was delivering the information that people were quite satisfied with what they were getting. I had no idea. Not only that, it was being translated by a musician friend of mine into German. At that time my German wasn't very good. So I really didn't know what they were getting or how they were taking it. I only found out later and they actually paid, which to me was all a miracle.

I had a little room that had been built by my friend's father as a kind of country cabin. It was very rustic, very woody, very cold, wet. I had this room that was all wood—the floors, the walls, the ceiling. I had a desk and a bed in that room and it's where I did all of my work in my process. One night a friend of ours showed up. It was deep in the winter. This would have been in 1990. He was somebody who enjoyed taking mescaline, which is quite a powerful thing to take into your body.

He invited us to join him. I took the mescaline and I went into my room where I worked. I was writing in my journal. In those years I kept daily journals—my thoughts, my process, all of those things. Normally when I was writing in the journal—I don't like harsh lights—I normally would light a candle. I was used to that after living for years in Ibiza without electricity. My eyes enjoyed candlelight. I was there busy writing away. At some point I hear some outrageous laughter, really outrageous laughter. The kind of laughter where you know that laughter is so contagious. And it pulled me. I was very, very focused and absorbed in whatever I was doing. It pulled me and I came into the other room and it's sort of around a bend and through a kitchen and over to a living room. There were these grown men laughing hilariously, God knows at what. You get caught in the moment; I got caught in the moment.

Then there was a—it's so difficult to describe these things—I'm deeply splenic. I suddenly had—it almost felt like a hand grabbing my spleen and squeezing it.

Interestingly enough my associate, my friend, picked it up exactly at the same time I did. And both of us went racing out of that room back to my room. And as I got to the open doorway, the candlestick was knocked over. There was absolutely nothing that could have knocked that candlestick over; absolutely nothing. It was stable; it was a heavy stick, all of that stuff. And it's not like the candle fell over. The whole stick was lying over, with the holder and everything.

My desk that had absolutely everything that I had ever written in my design process, that desk was on fire. Not only was it on fire, but the flames were actually licking across the ceiling of the room. And as I stood there—of course, all of this was very fast—the thing that really startled me, and I'm a 51.5 exalted, I'm here to deal with shock, was that the flames were filled with demons and they were all laughing outrageously. It was—I don't know how to describe something like that—it was as nauseating as it hilarious. In that kind of situation, in the shock of that and the power of the drug and all of those things, and all of this is three-dimensional. There I am with my friend and we're carrying my burning desk with these flames full of laughing demons out the front door and we throw it all into the snow to put out the fire.

I looked at all of that and I thought, oh, I don't think this is what I'm supposed to do with my life. It was like, wow, boom, the laughing demons. That's it, baby; game over. And I walked back into the house. We looked at the room to see what shape it was in. And other than the fact that it was horribly stained black by all of the soot and everything, it was still all intact, the room was intact.

I can remember going back with him into the living room and sitting there for awhile. At some point I got up and I just had to go out and see. I go out. It was freezing cold and I go out and start picking things up and I noticed that nothing was destroyed. I still have the journals that were in that fire. Yeah, they had some slight tarring. Not a single page—I had loose paper on that desk. The whole desk was on fire, the flames were touching the ceiling. Not a single thing was lost, nothing. I was sitting in the snow and laughing. I caught myself in the middle of the laughter because I sounded exactly like the forces in the fire. I almost gagged on my own laughter. It was very funny. I think they enjoyed it; I don't know about me.

Anyway, we still have some time so if you have any questions or comments. It's the end of our year together. I'm certainly open.

Yes, the laughing demons of mescalito; that's a good story.

Questions & Answers

Comment: Thank you Ra for that story; it reminded me of a scary story. I have a tendency to not like to talk about it. It's a question of giving energy to the wrong frequency. I am superstitious. But I love when you have your story.

Ra: Yes, you bring them to life when you tell those stories. They're living forces.

Comment: Well, since everybody seems to be very quiet right now, I'll tell a story about a friend of mine who had a house in Vermont. Vermont is known for its ghosts and poltergeists. He moved into a very remote town. The townspeople threatened to burn his house down because he was a kind of an odd looking refugee from hippydom. He moves into this house. It turns out that the house had been haunted for many, many years, probably a century. These ghosts that lived in this house were infamous.

Some friends of mine lived in this house besides the fellow who bought it and they would actually see the latches on the doors lift and the ghosts coming in the room and actually say people's names, and so on and so forth. My friend came home one day after work—he was a very hard working sort of guy, very aggressive personality—he comes home and he gets in the shower. He's getting out of the shower and walks back into his bedroom. At that point the door opened and one of these ghost presences came into the room and two cats that were on the bed stood up and arched their backs and went flying out of the room, out of the window. It was on the second storey of the building and they went straight out this window like a bullet.

At this point my friend said, ok, this is enough, we've got to do something about this. He didn't know what to do. He was coming back from where he worked the next day and there was some white-robed Jesus freaks on the side of the road with the rope belts, the Bibles, the whole deal, and he's driving by them and he's muttering under his breath going, ah, Jesus freaks. He's about 100 yards beyond them and he goes, wait a minute. He slams on the brakes, backs up, puts these guys in the backseat of his car, listens to their rap about Jesus and the gospel, or whatever it was on their mind. And he says to them, hey, do you guys need a place to stay? They said, oh, yes, brother we need a place to stay. So he brings them over to his house. He says, you ever do any exorcisms? Oh, yes, brother we do exorcisms. They spent the whole night burning candles and doing exorcisms. Those ghosts were never heard from again.

Ra: Yeah, they left with the Jesus freaks; a better frequency.

Question: Are new age practitioners like clairvoyants who are often tired, probably subject to energy loss through the rogues bundles?

Ra: I think that in relationship to your question, I think that the not-self, because they're not-self after all, they end up putting an enormous number of negative forces into their body. What your personality does with that it depends. Whether something is going to be draining or not in the end is a question of the form. And it's all about the decisions that these people make.

Question: It's a personal question; it's a question about me, because I never had any encounters. But I had some extraordinary experience, two in my life. One was connected with taking in drug. It was during a surgery operation and another was connected with-I wasn't prepared, it just happened in the circle of people and it was extraordinary because I lost my name, my understanding of my creature, I didn't even know who I was. My question is: Do any conscious field could be in this experience of human beings. I mean could somebody experience these extraordinary things without these bundles?

Ra: No, I don't think so. I don't think so at all. It's all part of personality programming whether it is the godhead that literally is in every cell in our body, or these kinds of personality programming anomalies. As I said, it is all us. It is all part of this construct. It's simply, again, dropping the veil. The moment you let go, the moment that the veil goes, that's the moment that there are things to see. We are not here to be victims of them, any more than we are here to be victims of the program of the godhead. We're not. I'm a heretic. I teach breaking the covenant. This is what I am all about.

I am very much aware of mechanics and respect what mechanical forces are. At the same time, it is clear to me that they are not here to be of any value to me. I am not here to be manipulated by personality consciousness. I am my own authority. Whatever these forces are, whatever these forces do, their work is integral to maintaining the not-self. And so I look at them from a very different perspective. I see them as agents of the program, another control mechanism. They're all just another control mechanism, a mechanism that will drive those that are obsessed to give up their authority to them. This is just another control.

My approach to cosmology is to honor the traditions, to know the names and to pay homage to the gods and to understand their connection to the continuity of all things; and yet, at the same time to see everything in its place. I have an advantage over all of these things, as you do. Is that we are crystals of consciousness in form. Not a primary crystal bundle for all its impressive numbers is nothing more than a collection of material that happens to filter the neutrino ocean, but nonetheless, it is not self-reflected consciousness. It is simply a filtering agency. It is an inanimate form principle.

These things, these rogue bundles, they are the same thing on a minor scale. They're an aggregate of crystals. They are not a thing in the sense that they are a self-reflected conscious life, they are not. There is no form principle. It's us. We're the magic. We are it. We make it all happen. We make it up every day.

For me in recognizing that all of this is an illusion and that I make it up that I might as well make it up correctly, because that's really what it is. And then it's not making it up, it is just what is. It is the process and it is what is happening and it is nothing more or less. And these forces, whatever they may be, they're interesting. I see them. But then again, they serve no purpose to me, any more than I'm interested in digging through somebody else's old garbage can. I'm not; not at all.

Anyway, it's been a lovely year. I've enjoyed my break with Rave Cosmology to get out of the very straight mechanics of this knowledge. That will continue. Rave Cosmology VII, which I am, as with all cosmology courses, I do them because I'm interested. It's been a long time since anybody really looked at the stars with my particular perspective. I'm looking forward to it; I'm looking forward to looking at some. After all, the neutrino ocean comes from the stars. I want to look at some of them and try to grasp what they're about. It should be interesting, the nature of the stars.

But anyway, to all of you, you take care. If I don't see you again, have yourself an entertaining summer. I will be doing an open house next week on Wednesday and I'll be doing a review basically of all the programs that are going to be offered. If you can't be there, it will be available as a download. So you will be able to get access to it. Other than that, you take care; bye for now.
